Preface

If India is generally considered by many as a museum of languages where one can find more than 1600 languages, Nilagiri in Tamil nadu can be rightly taken as a replica of India. Nilagiri is a small hilly district where one can meet very many distinct languages though they all belong to one and the same family of languages, namely Dravidian. These languages offer rich raw materials for our linguistic enquiries and we are very fortunate to have such an array of languages in one and the same place.

It is also very interesting to note that the customs and social traditions of various tribes in this area have been made use of by various research scholars in various desciplines for their studies and this area has been well known for diverse social customs and social conditions. Even from the 16th century onwards these people and their modes of life are known to the western world and a number of contributions on them have appeared ever since.

While working on various languages spoken in this area we have come across many good contributions to the other related desciplines both by westerners and others.

We thought that a bibliography of these contributions and the publication of the same will be of immense help for various research scholars and we are very happy that it is now possible for us to place the collection before the public. It is our earnest hope that in the near future the Centre of Advanced Study in Linguistics at the Annamalai University will be able to extend its research activities in the other related disciplines like Sociology, Anthropology, etc., which are very useful to many linguistic enquiries.

Though the title of the book suggests only the Nilagiri hill tribes, the other tribes found in other parts of Tamil Nadu are also included.

It is our pleasant duty to thank Mrs. Piljain of Ootacamund, Dr. N. C. Choudhri of the Anthropological Survey of India, Calcutta, for their immense help in the preparation of this book. Our thanks are also due to Dr. S. P. Adinarayan, the Vice-Chancellor of the Annamalai University for his encouragement.

We are also thankful to Mr. R. Balakrishnan who has helped us in various ways. Our thanks must also go to M/s. Sivakami Printers, who have done the printing work so nicely within a short period.
