THE VILLAGE DRAMA SOCIETY

In association with the British Drama League

The Society sends out sets of plays for selection, and gives advice on questions of production. It will arrange Drama Schools, and provides Lecturers and Adjudicators.

The Costume Department makes a speciality of beautiful and accurate historical costume, taking into account not only stage lighting for indoor plays, but distance and daylight on outdoor performances. Well-known portraits have been copied in many instances. The department can now undertake to dress Pageants, Mystery plays, Shakespeare, Restoration, Eighteenth Century, and early Nineteenth Century plays, as well as Greek drama.

INTRODUCTION

LIKE many other successful men of the theatre, T. W. Robertson was born and bred in his profession. His father was the manager and his mother a member of the Lincoln Circuit Company, and his youngest sister, who celebrated her eighty-second birthday on March 15, 1931, is the famous actress, Dame Madge Kendal. "Tom" Robertson was born at Newark-upon-Trent on January 9, 1829, and educated chiefly in the theatre, with an interlude at school, beginning to act in infancy and to write in boyhood. He saw the decline and fall of the "circuits," which Dickens has portrayed with characteristic humour and exaggeration in Nicholas Nickleby and Sir Arthur Pinero has presented more realistically in Trelawney of the Wells. By the middle of the century his father's company had to be disbanded, and Robertson went to London, where he kept himself alive by a prodigious amount of badly-paid work—acting, writing, translating and adapting plays, and writing verse, stories, essays, dramatic criticism, and humorous articles for many journals. The entire rights in one drama, Castles in the Air (1854) he sold for £3!

In 1856 he married a beautiful girl of nineteen, Elizabeth Burton, and in 1864 David Garrick, an adaptation from the French, with E. A. Sothern in the title-rôle, brought him a first taste of success. A year later, three months after his wife's death, Marie Wilton had the courage to stage for him a play which she regarded as daringly original—Society, the first of the series of comedies, Ours, Caste, Play, School, Home, Dreams, M.P., and others, that made their author world-famous. His success continued until his last play, War (1871) failed because it clashed with popular feeling about the Franco-Prussian War. He died on February 3, 1871.

T. W. Robertson began work in London when English drama was at its lowest ebb. "I can scarcely describe the slovenliness with which plays were performed," writes Clement Scott, "or the ludicrous managerial methods adopted to illustrate modern comedy. Such a thing as nature was scarcely known on the stage. Old men of sixty played lovers of twenty-one, and the costumes of ladies of fashion came out of the theatrical rag-bag." Make-up, stage-furniture, and many other details were equally crude. Acting and play-writing had fallen into a narrow rut of burlesque and melodrama, using over and over again a worn-out set of tricks and stage-types and situations. Plays were often flung together by methods as crude as those expounded to Nicholas Nickleby by Mr. Vincent Crummies, and were hardly less ludicrous than W. S. Gilbert's later parodies of them, while the occasional incursions of men of letters, such as Browning, with no knowledge of the theatre, produced only plays which could not be brought to life on the stage.

INTRODUCTION

Some educated people despaired of the English theatre altogether; T. W. Robertson set out to reform it. Accustomed as we are to the almost unlimited range of modern drama, in both subject and treatment, from the lightest entertainment or the most imaginative fantasy to the realistic presentation of contemporary life in all its aspects, we regard Robertson's plays as merely old-fashioned. In his own time they were regarded as most advanced. From French drama he had learned, perhaps too well, the technique of the well-made play; in characterization and dialogue his aim, like that of all reformers in the arts, was to return to nature, and though he never completely freed himself from stage conventionality, to some extent he succeeded.

Society was rejected as "Rubbish" by J. B. Buckstone, the manager of the Haymarket, but Robertson soon found the allies he needed in the brilliant comedy actress, Marie Wilton, and her future husband, Squire Bancroft. They not only presented his plays at their little theatre, the Prince of Wales's, in Tottenham Court Road, they gave Robertson the opportunity to prove himself an excellent producer and stage-manager, so that his work was presented as he wished it to be, scrupulously rehearsed and staged, and from the first the experiment was a popular success. Robertson wrought no immediate reformation in English drama, but he is rightly honoured as the herald of that renaissance which began at the end of the century.

Caste is generally accepted as his best play, and is characteristic in its curious way of jolting from sincerity into theatricality, and then back into sincerity again. George D'Alroy and Esther move for the most part in a roseate haze of Victorian stage-sentimentality, the Marquise belongs to Lyceum or Hollywood melodrama, and Eccles is too easily labelled "Comic Plebeian." Yet the author's honest attempt at sincerity and truth is equally plain—he has a pleasant vein of humour and satire, no class-prejudice and no axe to grind, and the whole play shows how far he had advanced, both artistically and technically, beyond all his contemporaries. He is Mr. John Galsworthy's Victorian forerunner. And though it is the student of English drama who now finds Caste most interesting, the play is still acted regularly on the amateur stage, seriously or with a tinge of burlesque.

CASTE

ACT I

George. Told you so ; the key was left under the mat in case I came. They're not back from rehearsal. (Hangs up hat on peg near door as Hawtree enters.) Confound rehearsal ! (Crosses to fireplace.)

Hawtree (c. of stage, back to audience, looking round). And this is the fairy's bower!

George. Yes! And this is the fairy's fireplace; the fire is laid. I'll light it.

(Lights fire with lucifer from mantelpiece.)

Hawtree (turning to George). And this is the abode rendered blessed by her abiding. It is here that she dwells, walks; talks—eats and drinks. Does she eat and drink?

George. Yes, heartily. I've seen her.

Hawtree. And you are really spoons!—case of true love—hit—dead.

George. Right through. Can't live away from her.

(With elbow on end of mantelpiece down stage.)

Hawtree. Poor old Dal! and you've brought me over the water to——

George. Stangate.

Hawtree. Stangate—to see her for the same sort of reason that when a patient is in a dangerous state one doctor calls in another—for a consultation.

George. Yes. Then the patient dies.

Hawtree. Tell us all about it—you know I've been away. (Sits R. of table, leg on a chair.)

George. Well, then, eighteen months ago——

Hawtree. Oh, cut that; you told me all about that. You went to a theatre, and saw a girl in a ballet, and you fell in love.

George. Yes. I found out that she was an amiable, good girl.

Hawtree. Of course; cut that. We'll credit her with all the virtues and accomplishments.

George. Who worked hard to support a drunken father.

Hawtree. Oh! the father's a drunkard, is he? The father does not inherit the daughter's virtues?

George. No. I hate him.

Hawtree. Naturally. Quite so! quite so!

George. And she—that is, Esther—is very good to her younger sister.

Hawtree. Younger sister also angelic, amiable, accomplished, etc., etc.?

George. Um—good enough, but got a temper—large temper. Well, with some difficulty I got to speak to her. I mean to Esther. Then I was allowed to see her to her door here.

Hawtree. I know—pastry-cooks—Richmond dinner—and all that.

George. You're too fast. Pastry-cooks—yes. Richmond—no. Your knowledge of the world, fifty yards round barracks, misleads you. I saw her nearly every day, and I kept on falling in love—falling and falling, till I thought I should never reach the bottom; then I met you.

Hawtree. I remember the night when you told me; but I thought it was only an amourette. However, if the fire is a conflagration, subdue it; try dissipation.

George. I have.

Hawtree. What success?

George. None; dissipation brought me bad health and self-contempt, a sick head and a sore heart.

Hawtree. Foreign travel; absence makes the heart grow—(slight pause)—stronger. Get leave and cut away.

George. I did get leave, and I did cut away;

Absence makes the heart grow fonder. From an anonymous poem in Davison's Poetical Rhapsody (1602); repeated in T. H. Bailey's Isle of Beauty.

and while away, I was miserable and a gone-er coon than ever.

Hawtree. What's to be done ?

(Sits cross-legged on chair, facing George.)

George. Don't know. That's the reason I asked you to come over and see.

Hawtree. Of course, Dal, you're not such a soft as to think of marriage. You know what your mother is. Either you are going to behave properly, with a proper regard for the world, and all that, you know ; or you're going to do the other thing. Now, the question is, what do you mean to do ? The girl is a nice girl, no doubt ; but as to your making her Mrs. D'Alroy, the thing is out of the question.

George. Why ? What should prevent me ?

Hawtree. Caste !—the inexorable law of caste ! The social law, so becoming and so good, that commands like to mate with like, and forbids a giraffe to fall in love with a squirrel.

George. But my dear Bark——

Hawtree. My dear Dal, all those marriages of people with common people are all very well in novels and in plays on the stage, because the real people don't exist, and have no relatives who exist, and no connections, and so no harm's done, and it's rather interesting to look at ; but in real life, with real relations, and real mothers, and so forth, it's absolute bosh. It's worse—it's utter social and personal annihilation and damnation.

George. As to my mother, I haven't thought about her.

Hawtree. Of course not. Lovers are so damned selfish ; they never think of anybody but themselves.

George. My father died when I was three years old, and she married again before I was six, and married a Frenchman.

Hawtree. A nobleman of the most ancient families in France, of equal blood to her own. She obeyed the duties imposed on her by her station and by caste.

George. Still, it caused a separation and a division between us, and I never see my brother, because he lives abroad. Of course the Marquise de St. Maur is my mother, and I look upon her with a sort of superstitious awe.

(Moves chair with which he has been twisting about during speech from R. of table, to corner L.)

Hawtree. She's a grand Brahmin priestess.

George. Just so; and I know I'm a fool. Now, you're clever, Bark—a little too clever, I think. You're paying your devoirs—that the correct word, isn't it?—to Lady Florence Carberry, the daughter of a countess. She's above you—you've no title. Is she to forget her caste?

Hawtree. That argument doesn't apply. A man can be no more than a gentleman.

George. "Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

Hawtree. Now, George, if you're going to consider this question from the point of view of poetry, you're off to No Man's Land, where I won't follow you.

George. No gentleman can be ashamed of the woman he loves. No matter what her original station, once his wife he raises her to his rank.

Hawtree. Yes, he raises her—her; but her connections—her relatives. How about them?

(Eccles enters, D.R.)

Kind hearts are more . . . Tennyson: "Lady Clara Vere de Vere."

Eccles (outside). Polly! Polly! (Enters.) Why the devil——

(George crosses to Hawtree, who rises. Eccles sees them, and assumes a deferential manner.)

Eccles. Oh, Mr. De Alroy! I didn't see you, sir. Good-afternoon; the same to you, sir, and many on 'em. (Puts hat on bureau and comes down R.H.)

Hawtree. Who is this?

George. This is papa.

Hawtree. Ah!

(Turns up to book-shelf, scanning Eccles through eye-glass.)

George. Miss Eccles and her sister not returned from rehearsal yet?

Eccles. No, sir, they have not. I expect 'em in directly. I hope you've been quite well since I seen you last, sir?

George. Quite, thank you; and how have you been, Mr. Eccles?

Eccles. Well, sir, I have not been the thing at all. My 'elth, sir, and my spirits is both broke. I'm not the man I used to be. I am not accustomed to this sort of thing. I've seen better days, but they are gone—most like for ever. It is a melancholy thing, sir, for a man of my time of life to look back on better days that are gone most like for ever.

George. I daresay.

Eccles. Once proud and prosperous, now poor and lowly. Once master of a shop, I am now, by the pressure of circumstances over which I have no control, driven to seek work and not to find it. Poverty is a dreadful thing, sir, for a man as has once been well off.

George. I daresay.

Eccles (sighing). Ah, sir, the poor and lowly is often 'ardly used. What chance has the working man ?

Hawtree. None when he don't work.

Eccles. We are all equal in mind and feeling.

George (aside). I hope not.

Eccles. I am sorry, gentlemen, that I cannot offer you any refreshment ; but luxury and me has long been strangers.

George. I am very sorry for your misfortunes, Mr. Eccles. (Looking round at Hawtree, who turns away) May I hope that you will allow me to offer you this trifling loan ? (Giving him a half-sovereign.)

Eccles. Sir, you're a gentleman. One can tell a real gentleman with half a sov—I mean with half an eye—a real gentleman understands the natural emotions of the working man. Pride, sir, is a thing as should be put down by the strong 'and of pecuniary necessity. There's a friend of mine round the corner as I promised to meet on a little matter of business ; so, if you will excuse me, sir——

George. With pleasure.

Eccles (going up, R.). Sorry to leave you, gentlemen, but——

George. } Don't stay on my account.

Hawtree. } Don't mention it.

Eccles. Business is business. (Goes up, D.R.) The girls will be in directly. Good-afternoon, gentlemen—good-afternoon—(going out)—good-afternoon !

(Exit, D.R. George sits in chair corner of table R.)

Hawtree (coming down L. of table). Papa is not nice, but (sitting on corner of table, down stage)——

“ Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood.”

Poor George ! I wonder what your mamma—the Most Noble the Marquise de St. Maur—would think of papa Eccles. Come, Dal, allow that there is something in caste. Conceive that dirty ruffian—that rinsing of stale beer—that walking tap-room, for a father-in-law. Take a spin to Central America. Forget her.

George. Can't.

Hawtree. You'll be wretched and miserable with her.

George. I'd rather be wretched with her, than miserable without her. (Hawtree takes out cigar case.) Don't smoke here!

Hawtree. Why not?

George. She'll be coming in directly.

Hawtree. I don't think she'd mind.

George. I should. Do you smoke before Lady Florence Carberry?

Hawtree (closing case). Ha! You're suffering from a fit of the morals.

George. What's that?

Hawtree. The morals is a disease like the measles, that attacks the young and innocent.

George (with temper). You talk like Mephistopheles, without the cleverness.

(Goes up to window, and looks at watch.)

Hawtree (arranging cravat at glass). I don't pretend to be a particularly good sort of fellow, nor a particularly bad sort of fellow. I suppose I'm about the average standard sort of thing, and I don't like to see a friend go down hill to the devil while I can put the drag on. (Turning, with back to fire) Here is a girl of very humble station—poor, and all that, with a drunken father, who evidently doesn't care how he gets money so long as he don't work for it. Marriage! Pah! Couldn't the thing be arranged?

George. Hawtree, cut that! (At window) She's here!
 (Goes to door and opens it.)

(Enter Esther, D.R.H.)

George (flurried at sight of her). Good-morning. I got here before you, you see.

Esther (R. 1). Good-morning.

(Sees Hawtree—slight pause, in which Hawtree has removed his hat.)

George (R. 2). I've taken the liberty—I hope you won't be angry—of asking you to let me present a friend of mine to you: Miss Eccles—Captain Hawtree.

(Hawtree bows. George assists Esther in taking off bonnet and shawl.)

Hawtree (B. L., aside). Pretty.

Esther (aside). Thinks too much of himself.

George (hangs up bonnet and shawl on pegs). You've had a late rehearsal. Where's Polly?

Esther. She stayed behind to buy something.

(Enter Polly, D.R.H.)

Polly (R.). Hallo! (Head through door) How de do, Mr. D'Alroy? Oh! I'm tired to death. Kept at rehearsal by an old fool of a stage manager. But stage managers are always old fools—except when they are young. We shan't have time for any dinner, so I've brought something for tea.

Esther. What is it?

Polly. Ham. (Showing ham in paper. Esther sits R. at window. Crossing R.C. Seeing Hawtree) Oh! I beg your pardon, sir. I didn't see you.

George. A friend of mine, Mary. Captain Hawtree—Miss Mary Eccles. (George sits L. at window.) (Polly bows very low, 1 R., 2 L., 3 C., half burlesquely to Hawtree.)

Hawtree. Charmed.

Polly (aside). What a swell! Got nice teeth, and he knows it.—How quiet we all are; let's talk about something.

(Hangs up her hat. She crosses to fire L., round table-front. Hawtree crosses and places hat on bureau.)

Esther (R.C.). What can we talk about?

Polly. Anything. Ham. Mr. D'Alroy, do you like ham?

George. I adore her—(Polly titters)—I mean I adore it.

Polly (to Hawtree, who has crossed to table R., watching Polly undo paper containing the ham. She turns the plate on top of the ham still in the paper, then throws the paper aside and triumphantly brings the plate under Hawtree's nose, Hawtree giving a little start back). Do you like ham, sir? (Very tragically.)

Hawtree. Yes.

Polly. Now that is very strange. I should have thought you'd have been above ham.

(Getting tea-tray.)

Hawtree. May one ask why?

Polly. You look above it. You look quite equal to tongue—glazed. (Laughing) Mr. D'Alroy is here so often that he knows our ways.

(Getting tea-things from sideboard and placing them on table.)

Hawtree. I like everything that is piquante and fresh, and pretty and agreeable.

Polly (laying table all the time for tea). Ah! you mean that for me. (Curtseying) Oh! (Sings) Tra, la, la, la, la, la. (Flourishes cup in his face; he retreats a step.) Now I must put the kettle on. (George and Esther are at window.) Esther never does any work when Mr. D'Alroy is here. They're spooning; ugly word spooning, isn't it?—reminds one of red-currant jam. By-the-bye, love is very like red-currant jam—at the first taste sweet, and afterwards shuddery. Do you ever spoon ?

Hawtree (leaning across table). I should like to do so at this moment.

Polly. I daresay you would. No, you're too grand for me. You want taking down a peg—I mean a foot. Let's see—what are you—a corporal ?

Hawtree. Captain.

Polly. I prefer a corporal. See here. Let's change about. You be corporal—it'll do you good—and I'll be "my lady."

Hawtree. Pleasure.

Polly. You must call me "my lady," though, or you shan't have any ham.

Hawtree. Certainly, my lady; but I cannot accept your hospitality, for I'm engaged to dine.

Polly. At what time ?

Hawtree. Seven.

Polly. Seven! Why, that's half-past tea-time. Now, corporal, you must wait on me.

Hawtree. As the pages did of old.

Polly. My lady.

Hawtree. My lady.

Polly. Here's the kettle, corporal.

(Holding out kettle at arm's length. Hawtree looks at it through eyeglass.)

Hawtree. Very nice kettle !

Polly. Take it into the back kitchen.

Hawtree. Eh !

Polly. Oh ! I'm coming too.

Hawtree. Ah ! that alters the case.

(He takes out handkerchief and then takes hold of kettle—crosses to R. as George rises and comes down, slapping Hawtree on back. Hawtree immediately places kettle on floor. Polly throws herself into chair by fireside up stage, and roars with laughter. George and Esther laugh.)

George. What are you about ?

Hawtree. I'm about to fill the kettle.

Esther (going to Polly). Mind what you are doing, Polly ! What will Sam say ?

Polly. Whatever Sam chooses. What the sweet-heart don't see the husband can't grieve at. Now then—corporal !

Hawtree. My lady ! (Takes up kettle.)

Polly. Attention ! Forward ! March ! and mind the soot don't drop upon your trousers.

(Exeunt Polly and Hawtree, door R., Hawtree first.)

Esther. What a girl it is—all spirits ! The worst is that it is so easy to mistake her.

George. And so easy to find out your mistake. (They cross to L., down stage, Esther first.) But why won't you let me present you with a piano ?

(Following Esther.)

Esther. I don't want one.

George. You said you were fond of playing.

Esther. We may be fond of many things without having them. (Leaning against end of table. Taking out letter) Now here is a gentleman says that he is attached to me.

George (jealous). May I know his name ?

Esther. What for ? It would be useless, as his solicitations— (Throws letter into fire.)

George. I lit that fire.

Esther. Then burn these too. (George crosses to fire.) No, not that. (Taking one back) I must keep that ; burn the others.

(George throws letter on fire, crosses back of table quickly—takes hat from peg and goes to door as if leaving hurriedly. Esther takes chair R. of table and goes C. with it, noticing George's manner. George hesitates at door. Shuts it quickly, hangs his hat up again, and comes down to back of chair in which Esther has seated herself.)

George (L.C. 1) Who is that from ?

Esther (L.C. 2). Why do you wish to know ?

George. Because I love you, and I don't think you love me, and I fear a rival.

Esther. You have none.

George. I know you have so many admirers.

Esther. They're nothing to me.

George. Not one ?

Esther. No. They're admirers, but there's not a husband among them.

George. Not the writer of that letter ?

Esther. Oh, I like him very much. (Coquettishly.)

George. Ah ! (Sighing.)

Esther. And I'm very fond of this letter.

George. Then, Esther, you don't care for me.

Esther. Don't I ? How do you know ?

George. Because you won't let me read that letter.

Esther. It won't please you if you see it.

George. I daresay not. That's just the reason that I want to. You won't ?

Esther (hesitates). I will. There !

(Giving it to him.)

George (reads). " Dear Madam."

Esther. That's tender, isn't it ?

George. " The terms are four pounds—your dresses to be found. For eight weeks certain, and longer if you should suit. (George, L., in astonishment) I cannot close the engagement until the return of my partner. I expect him back to-day, and will write you as soon as I have seen him.—Yours very," etc. Four pounds—find dresses. What does this mean ?

Esther. It means that they want a Columbine for the pantomime at Manchester, and I think I shall get the engagement.

George. Manchester ; then you'll leave London !

Esther. I must. (Pathetically) You see, this little house is on my shoulders. Polly only earns eighteen shillings a week, and father has been out of work a long, long time. I make the bread here, and it's hard to make sometimes. I've been mistress of this place, and forced to think ever since my mother died, and I was eight years old. Four pounds a week is a large sum, and I can save out of it.

(This speech is not to be spoken in a tone implying hardship.)

George. But you'll go away, and I shan't see you.

Esther. P'r'aps it will be for the best. (Rises and crosses L.) What future is there for us ? You're a man of rank, and I am a poor girl who gets her living by dancing. It would have been better that we had never met.

George. No.

Esther. Yes, it would, for I'm afraid that——

George. You love me ?

Esther. I don't know. I'm not sure ; but I think I do. (Stops L. and turns half-face to George.)

George (trying to seize her hand). Esther !

Esther. No. Think of the difference of our stations.

George. That's what Hawtree says. Caste ! caste ! curse caste ! (Goes up C.)

Esther. If I go to Manchester it will be for the best. We must both try to forget each other.

George (comes down L. and L. of table). Forget you! no, Esther; let me—— (Seizing her hand.)

Polly (without). Mind what you're about. Oh dear! oh dear!

(George and Esther sit in window seat.)

(Enter Polly and Hawtree, D.R.)

Polly. You nasty, great, clumsy corporal, you've spilt the water all over my frock. Oh dear! (Coming down, R.C., Hawtree puts kettle on ham on table.) Take it off the ham!

(Hawtree then places it on the mantelpiece.)

Polly. No, no; put it in the fireplace. (Hawtree does so.) You've spoilt my frock. (Sitting c.)

Hawtree. Allow me to offer you a new one.

(Crossing to L.C.)

Polly. No, I won't. You'll be calling to see how it looks when it's on. Haven't you got a handkerchief?

Hawtree. Yes!

Polly. Then wipe it dry.

(Hawtree bends almost on one knee, and wipes dress, on her L.H. Enter Sam, whistling, door R. Throws cap into Hawtree's hat on drawers.)

Sam (sulkily). Arternoon—yer didn't hear me knock!—the door was open. I'm afraid I intrude.

Polly. No, you don't. We're glad to see you if you've got a handkerchief. Help to wipe this dry. (Sam pulls out handkerchief from slop, and, dropping on one knee, snatches skirt of dress from Hawtree, who looks up surprised.)

Hawtree. I'm very sorry. (Rising) I beg your pardon. (Business; Sam stares Hawtree out.)

Polly. It won't spoil it.

Sam. The stain won't come out. (Rising.)

Polly. It's only water!

Sam. Afternoon, Miss Eccles! (To Esther) Afternoon, sir! (To George. Polly rises) Who's the other swell? (To Polly.)

Polly. I'll introduce you. (Sam R. Polly C. Hawtree L.) Captain Hawtree—Mr. Samuel Gerridge.

Hawtree. Charmed, I'm sure. (Staring at Sam through eyeglass. Sam acknowledges Hawtree's recognition by a "chuck" of the head over left shoulder. Going up to George) Who's this?

George. Polly's sweetheart.

Hawtree. Oh! Now, if I can be of no further assistance, I'll go. (Comes over back down R. to drawers.)

Polly. Going, corporal?

Hawtree. Yaas! (Business; taking up hat and stick from bureau, he sees Sam's cap. He picks it out carefully, and, coming down stage R., examines it as a curiosity, drops it on the floor and pushes it away with his stick, at the same time moving backwards, causing him to bump against Sam, who turns round savagely.) I beg your pardon! (Crossing up stage) George, will you—— (George takes no notice.) Will you——

George. What?

Hawtree. Go with me?

George. Go? No!

Hawtree (coming down C. to Polly L.). Then, Miss Eccles—I mean "my lady."

(Shaking hands and going; as he backs away bumps against Sam, and business repeated. Hawtree close to door R., keeping his eye on Sam, who has shown signs of anger.)

Polly. Good-bye, corporal!

Hawtree (at door). Good-bye! Good-afternoon, Mr.—Mr.—er—pardon me.

Sam (with constrained rage). Gerridge, sir. Gerridge!

Hawtree (as if remembering name). Ah! Gerridge.
Good-day. (Exit D.R.F.)

Sam (turning to Polly in awful rage). Who's that fool? Who's that long idiot?

Polly. I told you; Captain Hawtree.

Sam. What's 'e want 'ere?

Polly. He's a friend of Mr. D'Alroy's.

Sam. Ugh! Isn't one of 'em enough?

Polly. What do you mean?

Sam. For the neighbours to talk about. Who's he after?

Polly. What do you mean by after? You're forgetting yourself, I think.

Sam. No, I'm not forgetting myself—I'm remembering you. What can a long fool of a swell dressed up to the nines within an inch of his life want with two girls of your class? Look at the difference of your stations! 'E don't come 'ere after any good.

(During the speech, Esther crosses to fire and sits before it in a low chair. George follows her, and sits on her L.)

Polly. Samuel!

Sam. I mean what I say. People should stick to their own class. Life's a railway journey, and Mankind's a passenger—first class, second class, third class. Any person found riding in a superior class to that for which he has taken his ticket will be removed at the first station stopped at, according to the bye-laws of the company. (R.C.)

Polly. You're giving yourself nice airs! What business is it of yours who comes here? Who are you? (L.C.)

Sam. I'm a mechanic. (R.C.)

Polly. That's evident.

Sam. I ain't ashamed of it. I'm not ashamed of my paper cap.

Polly. Why should you be? I daresay Captain Hawtree isn't ashamed of his fourteen-and-sixpenny gossamer.

Sam. You think a deal of him 'cos he's a captain. Why did he call you "my lady"?

Polly. Because he treated me as one. I wish you'd make the same mistake!

Sam. Ugh!

(Sam goes angrily to bureau, Polly bounces up stage, and sits in window seat.)

Esther (sitting with George, tête-à-tête, by fire). But we must listen to reason.

George. I hate reason!

Esther. I wonder what it means?

George. Everything disagreeable! When people talk unpleasantly, they always say listen to reason.

Sam (turning round). What will the neighbours say?

Polly. I don't care! (Coming down c.)

Sam. What will the neighbours think?

Polly. They can't think. They're like you, they've not been educated up to it.

Sam. It all comes of your being on the stage.

(Going to Polly.)

Polly. It all comes of your not understanding the stage or anything else—but putty. Now, if you were a gentleman——

Sam. Why then, of course, I should make up to a lady!

Polly. Ugh!

(Polly flings herself into chair R. of table. Sam down R.)

George. Reason's an idiot! Two and two are four.

and twelve are fifteen, and eight are twenty. That's reason !

Sam (turning to Polly). Painting your cheeks !

Polly (rising). Better paint our cheeks than paint nasty old doors as you do. How can you understand art ? You're only a mechanic ! you're not a professional. You're in trade. You are not of the same station that we are. When the manager speaks to you, you touch your hat, and say, " Yes, sir," because he's your superior.

(Snaps fingers under Sam's nose.)

George. When people love there's no such thing as money—it don't exist.

Esther. Yes, it does.

George. Then it oughtn't to.

Sam. The manager employs me same as he does you. Payment is good everywhere and anywhere. Whatever's commercial, is right.

Polly. Actors are not like mechanics. They wear cloth coats, and not fustian jackets.

Sam. I despise play-actors.

(Sneeringly, in Polly's face.)

Polly. And I despise mechanics.

(Polly slaps his face.)

George. I never think of anything else but you.

Esther. Really ?

Sam (goes to bureau, misses cap, looks around, sees it on floor, picks it up angrily and comes to Polly, who is sitting chair R. of table). I won't stay here to be insulted.

(Putting on cap.)

Polly. Nobody wants you to stay. Go ! Go ! Go !

Sam. I will go. Good-bye, Miss Mary Eccles. (Goes off and returns quickly.) I shan't come here again !

(At door half-open.)

Polly. Don't! Good riddance to bad rubbish.

Sam (rushing down stage to Polly). You can go to your captain!

Polly. And you to your putty.

(Sam throws his cap down and kicks it—then goes up stage and picks it up. Polly turns and rises, leaning against table, facing him, crosses to door, and shuts it. Sam, hearing the click of the lock, turns quickly.)

Esther. And shall you always love me as you do now?

George. More.

Polly. Now you shan't go. (Locking door, taking out key, which she pockets, and placing her back against door) Nyer! Now I'll just show you my power. Nyer!

Sam. Miss Mary Eccles, let me out!

(Advancing to door.)

Polly. Mr. Samuel Gerridge, I shan't.

(Sam turns away.)

Esther. Now you two. (Postman's knock) The postman!

Sam. Now you must let me out. You must unlock the door.

Polly. No, I needn't. (Opens window, looking out) Here—postman. (Takes letter from postman, at window.) Thank you. (Business; flicks Sam in the face with letter.) For you, Esther!

Esther (rising). For me?

Polly. Yes.

(Gives it to her, and closes window, and returns to door triumphantly. Sam goes to window.)

Esther (going down R.C.). From Manchester!

George. Manchester ?

(Coming down L., back of Esther.)

Esther (reading). I've got the engagement—four pounds a week.

George (placing his arm around her). You shan't go. Esther—stay—be my wife !

Esther. But the world—your world ?

George. Hang the world ! You're my world. Stay with your husband, Mrs. George D'Alroy.

(During this Polly has been dancing up and down in front of door.)

Sam. I will go out !

(Turning with sudden determination.)

Polly. You can't, and you shan't !

Sam. I can—I will !

(Opens window, and jumps out.)

Polly (frightened). He's hurt himself. Sam—Sam, dear Sam !

Running to window. Sam appears at window.

Polly slaps his face and shuts window down violently.)

Polly. Nyer !

(During this George has kissed Esther.)

George. My wife !

(The handle of the door is heard to rattle, then the door is shaken violently. Esther crosses to door ; finding it locked, turns to Polly, sitting in window seat, who gives her the key. Esther then opens the door. Eccles reels in, very drunk, and clings to the corner of bureau, R., for support. George stands L.C., pulling his moustache. Esther, a little way up, R.C., looking with shame first at her father, then at George. Polly sitting in window recess, C.)

ACT DROP.

(For Call—George, hat in hand, bidding Esther good-bye, R.H. Eccles sitting in chair, nodding before fire. Sam again looks in at window. Polly pulls the blind down violently.)

ACT II

SCENE.—D'Alroy's lodgings in Mayfair. A set chamber. Folding-doors opening on to drawing-room, L.H. in flat. Door, R.H. in flat. Two windows, with muslin curtains, R.H. Loo-table, L.C. Sofa above piano. Two easy-chairs, R. and L. of table. Dessert—claret in jug: two wine-glasses half full. Box of cigarettes, vase of flowers, embroidered slipper on canvas, and small basket of coloured wools, all on table. Footstool, L. of L.H. easy-chair. Ornamental gilt work-basket on stand in window, I E.R. Easy-chair R.H., 2 E.R. Piano, L.H. Mahogany-stained easel with oil-painting of D'Alroy in full Dragoon regimentals. Davenport, with vase of flowers on it, R.C.; a chair on each side; a water-colour drawing over it, and on each side of room. Half moonlight through window. Esther and George discovered. Esther at window, R.; when curtain has risen she comes down slowly to chair R. of table, and George sitting in easy-chair L. of table. George has his uniform trousers and spurs on.

Esther. George, dear, you seem out of spirits.

George (smoking cigarette). Not at all, dear, not at all. (Rallying.)

Esther. Then why don't you talk?

George. I've nothing to say.

Esther. That's no reason.

George. I can't talk about nothing.

Esther. Yes, you can ; you often do. (Crossing to round back of table and caressing him) You used to do before we were married.

George. No, I didn't. I talked about you, and my love for you. D'ye call that nothing ?

Esther (sitting on stool, L. of George). How long have we been married, dear ? Let me see ; six months yesterday. (Dreamily) It hardly seems a week ; it almost seems a dream.

George (putting his arm around her). Awfully jolly dream. Don't let us wake up. (Aside and recovering himself) How ever shall I tell her ?

Esther. And when I married you I was twenty-two ; wasn't I ?

George. Yes, dear ; but then, you know, you must have been some age or other.

Esther. No ; but to think that I lived two-and-twenty years without knowing you ?

George. What of it, dear ?

Esther. It seems such a dreadful waste of time.

George. So it was—awful !

Esther. Do you remember our first meeting ? Then I was in the ballet.

George. Yes ; now you're in the heavies.

Esther. Then I was in the front rank—now I am of high rank—the Honourable Mrs. George D'Alroy. You promoted me to be your wife.

George. No, dear, you promoted me to be your husband.

Esther. And now I'm one of the aristocracy ; ain't I ?

Heavies. Punning on (1) heavy parts, i.e. serious parts on the stage ; (2) heavy cavalry, to which George belongs.

George. Yes, dear ; I suppose that we may consider ourselves——

Esther. Tell me, George ; are you quite sure that you are proud of your poor little humble wife ?

George. Proud of you ! Proud as the winner of the Derby.

Esther. Wouldn't you have loved me better if I'd been a lady ?

George. You are a lady—you're my wife.

Esther. What will your mamma say when she knows of our marriage ? I quite tremble at the thought of meeting her.

George. So do I. Luckily, she's in Rome.

Esther. Do you know, George, I should like to be married all over again.

George. Not to anybody else, I hope.

Esther. My darling !

George. But why over again ? Why ?

Esther. Our courtship was so beautiful. It was like in a novel from the library, only better. You, a fine, rich, high-born gentleman, coming to our humble little house to court poor me. Do you remember the ballet you first saw me in ? That was at Covent Garden. "Jeanne la Folle ; or, the Return of the Soldier." (Goes to piano) Don't you remember the dance ? (Plays a quick movement.)

George. Esther, how came you to learn to play the piano ? Did you teach yourself ?

Esther. Yes. (Turning on music-stool.) So did Polly. We can only just touch the notes to amuse ourselves.

George. How was it ?

Esther. I've told you so often.

(Rises and sits on stool at George's feet.)

George. Tell me again. I'm like the children—I like to hear what I know already.

Esther. Well, then, mother died when I was quite young. I can only just remember her. Polly was an infant; so I had to be Polly's mother. Father—who is a very eccentric man (George sighs deeply—Esther notices it and goes on rapidly—all to be simultaneous in action), but a very good one when you know him—did not take much notice of us, and we got on as we could. We used to let the first floor, and a lodger took it—Herr Griffenhaagen. He was a ballet master at the Opera. He took a fancy to me and asked me if I should like to learn to dance, and I told him father couldn't afford to pay for my tuition; and he said that (imitation) he did not want bayment, but dat he would teach me for noding, for he had taken a fancy to me, because I was like a leetle lady he had known long years ago in de far off land he came from. Then he got us an engagement at the theatre. That was how we first were in the ballet.

George (slapping his leg). That fellow was a great brick; I should like to ask him to dinner. What became of him?

Esther. I don't know. He left England. (George fidgets and looks at watch.) You are very restless, George. What's the matter?

George. Nothing.

Esther. Are you going out?

George. Yes. (Looking at his boots and spurs) That's the reason I dined in——

Esther. To the barracks?

George. Yes.

Esther. On duty?

George (hesitatingly). On duty. (Rising) And, of course, when a man is a soldier, he must go on duty when he's ordered, and where he's ordered, and—and—(aside)—why did I ever enter the service!

(Crosses to R.H.)

Esther (rises—crosses to George—and twining her arm round him). George, if you must go out to your club, go; don't mind leaving me. Somehow or other, George, these last few days everything seems to have changed with me—I don't know why. Sometimes my eyes fill with tears, for no reason, and sometimes I feel so happy, for no reason. I don't mind being left by myself as I used to do. When you are a few minutes behind time I don't run to the window and watch for you, and turn irritable. Not that I love you less—no, for I love you more; but often when you are away I don't feel that I am by myself. (Dropping her head on his breast) I never feel alone.

(Goes to piano and turns over music.)

George (watching Esther). What angels women are! At least, this one is. I forget all about the others. (Carriage-wheels heard off, R.H.) If I'd known I could have been so happy, I'd have sold out when I married.

(Knock at street door.)

Esther (standing at table). That for us, dear?

George (at first window). Hawtree in a hansom. He's come for—(aside) me. I must tell her sooner or later. (At door) Come in, Hawtree.

(Enter Hawtree, in regimentals, R.D.)

Hawtree. How do? Hope you're well, Mrs. D'Alroy? (Coming down, R.) George, are you coming to—

George (coming down L. of Hawtree). No, I've dined (gives a significant look)—we dined early.

(Esther plays scraps of music at piano.)

Hawtree (sotto voce). Haven't you told her?

George. No, I daren't.

Hawtree. But you must.

George. You know what an awful coward I am. You do it for me.

Hawtree. Not for worlds. I've just had my own adieux to make.

• George. Ay, yes—to Florence Carberry. How did she take it?

Hawtree. Oh (slight pause), very well.

George. Did she cry? (Earnestly.)

Hawtree. No.

George. Nor exhibit any emotion whatever?

Hawtree. No, not particularly.

George. Didn't you kiss her? (Surprisedly.)

Hawtree. No; Lady Clardonax was in the room.

George. Didn't she squeeze your hand?

(Wonderingly.)

Hawtree. No.

George. Didn't she say anything?

(Impressively.)

Hawtree. No, except that she hoped to see me back again soon, and that India was a bad climate.

George. Umph! It seems to have been a tragic parting (serio-comically)—almost as tragic as parting—your back hair.

Hawtree. Lady Florence is not the sort of person to make a scene.

George. To be sure, she's not your wife. I wish Esther would be as cool and comfortable. (After a pause) No, I don't—no, I don't. (A rap at door.)

(Enter Dixon, R.H.D.)

George (goes up to Dixon). Oh, Dixon, lay out my—

Dixon. I have laid them out, sir; everything is ready.

George (coming down to Hawtree—after a pause, irresolutely). I must tell her—mustn't I?

Hawtree. Better send for her sister. Let Dixon go for her in a cab.

George. Just so. I'll send him at once. Dixon!
(Goes up and talks to Dixon.)

Esther (rising and going to back of chair L. of table). Do you want to have a talk with my husband? Shall I go into the dining-room?

Hawtree. No, Mrs. D'Alroy.
(Going to R. of table and placing cap on it.)

George. No, dear. At once, Dixon. Tell the cabman to drive like—(exit Dixon, R.D.)—like a—cornet just joined.

Esther (to Hawtree). Are you going to take him anywhere?

Hawtree (L. George comes down R. of Hawtree and touches him quickly on the shoulder before he can speak). No. (Aside) Yes—to India. (Crossing to R. to George) Tell her now.

George (c.). No, no. I'll wait till I put on my uniform.
(Going up, R.H.)

(The R.H. door opens, and Polly peeps in.)

Polly. How d'ye do, good people—quite well?
(Polly gets c. back of table—kisses Esther.)

George. Eh? Didn't you meet Dixon?

Polly. Who?

George. Dixon—my man.

Polly. No.

George. Confound it! he'll have his ride for nothing. How d'ye do, Polly?
(Shakes hands.)

Polly. How d'ye do, George?

(Esther takes Polly's things and places them up, L.H.
Polly places parasol on table, c. Esther returns L. of Polly.)

Polly (B.C.). Bless you, my turtles. (Blessing them, ballet fashion) George, kiss your mother. (B.C. ; he kisses her) That's what I call an honourable brother-in-law's kiss. I'm not in the way, am I ?

George (behind easy-chair R. of table). Not at all. I'm very glad you've come.

(Esther shows Polly the new music. Polly sits at piano and plays comic tune.)

Hawtree (back to audience, and elbow on easy-chair, R. ; aside to George). Under ordinary circumstances she's not a very eligible visitor.

George. Caste again. (Going up, R.) I'll be back directly. (Exit George door R.H.)

Hawtree (looking at watch, and crossing, L.). Mrs. D'Alroy, I——

Esther (who is standing over Polly at piano). Going ?

Polly (rising). Do I drive you away, captain ?

(Taking her parasol from table. Esther gets to back of chair L. of table.)

Hawtree. No.

Polly. Yes, I do. I frighten you, I'm so ugly. I know I do. You frighten me.

Hawtree. How so ?

Polly (L.). You're so handsome. (Coming down, L.) Particularly in those clothes, for all the world like an inspector of police.

Esther (L., half aside). Polly !

Polly (L.C.). I will ! I like to take him down a bit.

Hawtree (R.C., aside). This is rather a wild sort of thing in sisters-in-law.

Polly. Any news, captain ?

Hawtree (in a drawling tone). No. Is there any news with you ?

Polly. Yaas ; (imitating him) we've got a new piece coming out at our theatre.

Hawtree (interested). What's it about ?

Polly (drawling). I don't know. (To Esther) Had him there ! (Hawtree drops his sword from his arm ; Polly turns round quickly, hearing the noise, and pretends to be frightened) Going to kill anybody to-day, that you've got your sword on ?

Hawtree. No.

Polly. I thought not.

(Sings.)

“ With a sabre on his brow,
And a helmet by his side,
The soldier sweethearts servant-maids,
And eats cold meat besides.”
(Laughs and walks about waving her parasol.)

(Enter George, door R.F., in uniform, carrying in his hand his sword, sword belt, and cap. Esther takes them from him, and places them on sofa, L.H. ; then comes half down, L.H. George goes down, R.C., by Hawtree.)

Polly (clapping her hands). Oh ! here's a beautiful brother-in-law. Why didn't you come in on horseback, as they do at Astley's ?—gallop in and say (imitating soldier on horseback and prancing up and down stage during the piece), Soldiers of France ! the eyes of Europe are a-looking at you ! The Empire has confidence in you, and France expects that every man this day will do his—little utmost ! The foe is before you—more's the pity—and you are before them—worse luck for you ! Forward ! Go and get killed ; and to those who escape the Emperor will give a little bit of ribbon ! Nineteens, about ! Forward ! Gallop ! Charge !

Astley's, The famous amphitheatre in Westminster Bridge Road, where Robertson's first wife was acting just before her death. Stangate was just behind Astley's.

(Galloping to R., imitating bugle, and giving point with parasol. She nearly spears Hawtree's nose. Hawtree claps his hand upon his sword-hilt. She throws herself into chair, laughing, and clapping Hawtree's cap (from table) upon her head. All laugh and applaud. Carriage-wheels heard without.)

Polly. Oh, what a funny little cap, it's got no peak. (A peal of knocks heard at street door.) What's that ?

George (who has hastened to window, R.). A carriage. Good heavens—my mother !

Hawtree (at window, I E.R.). The Marchioness !

Esther (crossing to George, B.C.). Oh, George !

Polly (crossing to window). A Marchioness ! A real, live Marchioness ! Let me look ! I never saw a real live Marchioness in all my life.

George (forcing her from window). No, no, no. She doesn't know I'm married. I must break it to her by degrees. What shall I do ?

(By this time Hawtree is at door R.H., Esther at door L.H.)

Esther. Let me go into the bedroom until——

Hawtree. Too late ! She's on the stairs.

Esther. Here, then ! (At c. doors, opens them.)

Polly. I want to see a real live March——

(George lifts her in his arms and places her within folding-doors with Esther—then shutting doors quickly, turns and faces Hawtree, who, gathering up his sword, faces George. They then exchange places much in the fashion of soldiers "mounting guard." As George opens door, R.F., and admits Marchioness, Hawtree drops down L.H.)

George (with great ceremony). My dear mother, I saw you getting out of the carriage.

Marquise. My dear boy (kissing his forehead), I'm so glad I got to London before you embarked. (George nervous. Hawtree coming down, L.H.) Captain Hawtree, I think. How do you do?

Hawtree (coming forward a little). Quite well, I thank your ladyship. I trust you are——

Marquise (sitting in easy-chair). Oh, quite, thanks. (Slight pause.) Do you still see the Countess and Lady Florence?

(Looking at him through her glasses.)

Hawtree. Yes.

Marquise. Please remember me to them— (Hawtree takes cap from table, and places sword under his arm.) Are you going?

Hawtree. Ya-a-s. Compelled. (Bows, crossing round back of table. To George, who meets him, c.) I'll be at the door for you at seven. We must be at barracks by the quarter. (George crosses, L. back of table.) Poor devil! This comes of a man marrying beneath him!

(Exit Hawtree, door R.F. George comes down L. of table.)

Marquise. I'm not sorry that he's gone, for I wanted to talk to you alone. Strange that a woman of such good birth as the Countess should encourage the attentions of Captain Hawtree for her daughter Florence. (During these lines D'Alroy conceals Polly's hat and umbrella under table.) Lady Clardonax was one of the old Carberrys of Hampshire—not the Norfolk Carberrys, but the direct line. And Mr. Hawtree's grandfather was in trade—something in the City—soap, I think. Stool, George! (Points to stool. George brings it to her. She motions that he is to sit at her feet ; George does so with a sigh.) He's a very nice person, but parvenu, as one may see by his languor and his swagger. My boy (kissing his forehead), I am sure, will never make a mésalliance. He is a D'Alroy, and by his mother's side Plantagenista. The source of our life stream is royal.

George. How is the Marquis ?

Marquise. Paralysed. I left him at Spa with three physicians. He always is paralysed at this time of the year ; it is in the family. The paralysis is not personal, but hereditary. I came over to see my steward ; got to town last night.

George. How did you find me out here ?

Marquise. I sent the footman to the barracks, and he saw your man Dixon in the street, and Dixon gave him this address. It's so long since I've seen you. (Leans back in chair.) You're looking very well, and I daresay when mounted are quite a "beau cavalier." And so, my boy (playing with his hair), you are going abroad for the first time on active service.

George (aside). Every word can be heard in the next room. If they've only gone upstairs !

Marquise. And now, my dear boy, before you go I want to give you some advice ; and you mustn't despise it because I'm an old woman. We old women know a great deal more than people give us credit for. You are a soldier—so was your father—so was his father—so was mine—so was our royal founder ; we were born to lead ! The common people expect it from us. It is our duty. Do you not remember in the Chronicles of Froissart ? (With great enjoyment) I think I can quote it word for word ; I've a wonderful memory for my age. (With closed eyes) It was in the fifty-ninth chapter—"How Godefroy D'Alroy helde the towne of St. Amande duryng the siege before Tournay." It said, "The towne was not closed but with pales, and captayne there was Sir Amory of Pauy—the Seneschall of Carcassoune—who had said it was not able to hold agaynste an hooste, when one Godefroy D'Alroy sayd that rather than he woulde depart, he woulde keep it to the best of his power. Whereat the souldiers cheered and sayd, 'Lead us on, Sir Godefroy.' And then began a fierce assault ; and they within were chased, and sought for shelter from street to street. But Godefroy stood at the gate so valyantly that the souldiers helde the towne until the commyng of the Earl of Haynault with twelve thousande men."

George (aside). I wish she'd go. If she once gets on to Froissart, she'll never know when to stop.

Marquise. When my boy fights—and you will fight—he is sure to distinguish himself. It is his nature to—(toys with his hair)—he cannot forget his birth. And when you meet these Asiatic ruffians, who have dared to revolt, and to outrage humanity, you will strike as your ancestor Sir Galtier of Chevrault struck at Poitiers. (Changing tone of voice as if remembering.) Froissart mentions it thus—"Sir Galtier, with his four squires, was in the front of that battell, and there did marvels in arms. And Sir Galtier rode up to the Prince, and sayd to him—'Sir, take your horse and ryde forth, this journey is yours. God is this day in your hands. Gette us to the French Kynge's batayle. I think verily by his valyantesse he woll not fly. Advance banner in the name of God and of Saynt George!' And Sir Galtier galloped forward to see his Kynge's victory, and meet his own death."

George (aside). If Esther hears all this !

Marquise. There is another subject about which I should have spoken to you before this; but an absurd prudery forbade me. I may never see you more. I am old—and you—are going into battle—(kissing his forehead with emotion)—and this may be our last meeting. (A noise heard within folding-doors.) What's that?

George. Nothing—my man Dixon in there.

Marquise. We may not meet again on this earth. I do not fear your conduct, my George, with men; but I know the temptations that beset a youth who is well-born. But a true soldier, a true gentleman, should not only be without fear, but without reproach. It is easier to fight a furious man than to forgo the conquest of a love-sick girl. A thousand Sepoys slain in battle cannot redeem the honour of a man who has betrayed the confidence of a trusting woman. Think, George, what dishonour—what stain upon your manhood—to hurl a girl to shame and degradation! And what excuse for it? That she is plebeian? A man of real honour will spare the woman who has confessed her love for him, as he would give quarter to an enemy he had disarmed. (Taking his hands) Let my boy avoid the snares so artfully spread; and when he asks his mother to welcome the woman he has chosen for his wife, let me take her to my arms and plant a motherly kiss upon the white brow of a lady. (Noise of a fall heard within folding-doors; rising) What's that?

George. Nothing.

(Rising.)

Marquise. I heard a cry.

(Folding-doors open, discovering Esther with Polly, staggering in, fainting.)

Polly. George! George!

(George goes up and Esther falls in his arms. Polly stands R.C. George places Esther on sofa. George on her R., Polly on her L.)

Marquise (coming down, R.). Who are these women?

Polly. Women!

Marquise. George D'Alroy, these persons should have been sent away. How could you dare to risk your mother meeting women of their stamp?

Polly (violently). What does she mean? How dare she call me a woman? What's she, I'd like to know?

George (R. of sofa). Silence, Polly! You mustn't insult my mother.

Marquise. The insult is from you. I leave you, and I hope that time may induce me to forget this scene of degradation. (Turning to go.)

George. Stay, mother. (Marchioness turns slightly away.) Before you go (George has raised Esther from sofa in both arms) let me present to you Mrs. George D'Alroy. My wife!

Marquise. Married!

George. Married.

(The Marchioness sinks into easy-chair, R.H. George replaces Esther on sofa up L., but still retains her hand. Three hesitating taps at door heard. George crosses to door, R.H., opens it, discovers Eccles, who enters. George drops down back of Marchioness's chair.)

Eccles (c.). They told us to come up. When your man came Polly was out; so I thought I should do instead. (Calling at door) Come up, Sam.

(Enter Sam in his Sunday clothes, with short cane and smoking a cheroot. He nods and grins—Polly points to Marchioness—Sam takes cheroot from his mouth and quickly removes his hat.)

Eccles. Sam had just called; so we three—Sam and I, and your man, all came in the 'ansom cab together. Didn't we, Sam?

(Eccles and Sam go over to the girls, L.H., and Eccles drops down to front of table—smilingly.)

Marquise (with glasses up, to George). Who is this? George (coming L. of Marchioness). My wife's father.

Marquise. What is he?

George. A—nothing.

Eccles. I am one of nature's noblemen. Happy to see you, my lady—(turning to her)—now my daughters have told me who you are—(George turns his back in an agony as Eccles crosses to Marchioness)—we old folks, fathers and mothers of the young couple's, ought to make friends.

(Holding out his dirty hand.)

Marquise (shrinking back). Go away! (Eccles goes back to table again, disgusted, L.H.) What's his name?

George. Eccles.

Marquise. Eccles! Eccles! There never was an Eccles. He don't exist.

Eccles (L.). Don't he, though! What d'ye call this?

(Goes up again L., to back of table as Sam drops down.

He is just going to take a decanter when Sam stops him.)

Marquise. No Eccles was ever born!

George. He takes the liberty of breathing notwithstanding. (Aside) And I wish he wouldn't!

Marquise. And who is the little man? Is he also Eccles?

(Sam looks round. Polly gets close up to him, and looks with defiant glance at the Marchioness.)

George. No.

Marquise. Thank goodness! What then?

George. His name is Gerridge.

Marquise. Gerridge! It breaks one's teeth. Why is he here?

George. He is making love to Polly, my wife's sister.

Marquise. And what is he?

George. A gasman.

Marquise. He looks it. (George goes up to Esther, L.) And what is she—the—the—the sister? Eccles, who has been casting longing eyes at the decanter on table, edges towards it, and when he thinks no one is noticing, fills wine-glass.

Polly (asserting herself indignantly). I'm in the ballet at the Theatre Royal, Lambeth. So was Esther. We're not ashamed of what we are! We have no cause to be.

Sam (back, L.C.). That's right, Polly! pitch into them swells!—who are they?

(Eccles by this time has seized wine-glass, and, turning his back, is about to drink, when Hawtree enters door, R. flat. Eccles hides glass under his coat, and pretends to be looking up at picture.)

Hawtree (entering). George! (Stops suddenly, looking round.) So, all's known!

Marquise (rising). Captain Hawtree, see me to my carriage; I am broken-hearted!

(Takes Hawtree's arm, and is going up.)

Eccles (who has tasted the claret, spits it out with a grimace, exclaiming). Rot!

Theatre Royal, Lambeth: presumably stands for Astley's Amphitheatre.

(Polly goes to piano, sits on stool—Sam back to audience, leaning on piano—Eccles exits through folding-doors.)

George (L. to Marchioness). Don't go in anger. You may not see me again.

(Esther rises in nervous excitement, clutching George's hand. Marchioness stops, R. Esther brings George down, C.)

Esther (L.C. ; with arm round his neck). Oh, George ! must you go ?

(They come L. to front of table.)

George (R.C.). Yes.

Esther. I can't leave you ! I'll go with you !

George. Impossible ! The country is too unsettled.

Esther. May I come after you ?

George. Yes.

Esther (with her head on his shoulder). I may.

Marquise (coming down, R., Hawtree at door R.H.). It is his duty to go. His honour calls him. The honour of his family—our honour !

Esther. But I love him so ! Pray don't be angry with me !

Hawtree (looking at watch, and coming down, C.). George !

George. I must go, love !

(Hawtree goes up to door again.)

Marquise (advancing). Let me arm you, George—let your mother, as in the days of old. There is blood—and blood, my son. See, your wife cries when she should be proud of you !

George. My Esther is all that is good and noble. No lady born to a coronet could be gentler or more true. Esther, my wife, fetch me my sword, and buckle my belt around me.

Esther (clinging to him). No, no ; I can't !

George. Try. (Whispers to Esther) To please my mother. (To Marchioness) You shall see. (Esther totters up stage, Polly assisting her L., and brings down his sword. As Esther is trying to buckle his belt, he whispers) I've left money for you, my darling. My lawyer will call on you to-morrow. Forgive me ! I tried hard to tell you we were ordered for India ; but when the time came, my heart failed me, and I——
(Esther, before she can succeed in fastening his sword-belt, reels, and falls fainting in his arms. Polly hurries to her. Sam standing at piano, looking frightened ; Hawtree with hand upon handle of door, R.F. ; Marchioness looking on, R. of George.)

ACT DROP

(For Call.—George and Hawtree gone. Esther in chair, c., fainting ; Polly and Sam each side of her, Polly holding her hands and Sam fanning her with his red handkerchief. The folding-doors, L.C., thrown open, and Eccles standing at back of table offering glass of claret.)

ACT III

SCENE.—The room in Stangate (as in Act I.). Same furniture as in Act I., with exception of piano, with roll of music tied up on it in place of bureau, R.H. Map of India over mantelpiece. Sword with crape knot, spurs, and cap, craped, hanging over chimney-piece. Portrait of D'Alroy (large) on mantelpiece, berceau-nette, and child, with coral, in it. Polly's bonnet and shawl hanging on peg, R.F. Small tin saucepan in fender, fire alight, and kettle on it. Two candles (tallow) in sticks, one of which is broken about three inches from the top and hangs over. Slate and pencil on table. Jug on table, bandbox and ballet skirt on table. At rise of curtain Polly discovered at table, back of stage: comes down and places the skirt in bandbox. She is dressed in black.

Polly (placing skirt in box, and leaning her chin upon her hand). There—there's the dress for poor Esther in case she gets the engagement, which I don't suppose she will. It's too good luck, and good luck never comes to her, poor thing. (Goes up to back of cradle.) Baby's asleep still. How good he looks—as good as if he were dead, like his poor father; and alive too, at the same time like his dear self. Ah! dear me; it's a strange world. (Sits in chair R. of table, feeling in pocket for money.) Four and elevenpence. That must do for to-day and to-morrow. Esther is going to bring in the rusks for Georgy. (Takes up slate.) Three, five—eight, and four—twelve, one shilling—father can only have twopence. (This all to be said in one breath.) He must make do with that till Saturday, when I get my salary. If Esther gets the engagement, I shan't have many more salaries to take; I shall leave the stage and retire into private life. I wonder if I shall like private life, and if private life will like me. It will seem so strange being no longer Miss Mary Eccles—but Mrs. Samuel Gerridge. (Writes it on slate.) “Mrs. Samuel Gerridge.” (Laughs bashfully.) La! to think of my being Mrs. Anybody. How annoyed Susan Smith will be! (Writing on slate) “Mrs. Samuel Gerridge presents her compliments to Miss Susan Smith, and Mrs. Samuel Gerridge requests the favour of Miss Susan Smith’s company to tea, on Tuesday evening next, at Mrs. Samuel Gerridge’s house.” (Pause.) Poor Susan! (Beginning again) “P.S.—“Mrs. Samuel Gerridge——”

(Knock heard at room door; Polly starts.)

Sam (without). Polly, open the door.

Polly. Sam! Come in.

Sam (without). I can't.

Polly. Why not?

Sam. I've got somethin' on my 'ead.

(Polly rises and opens door, R.H. Sam enters, carrying two rolls of wall-paper, one in each hand, and a small table on his head, which he deposits down stage, R.H., then puts rolls of paper on piano, as also his cap. Sam has a rule-pocket in corduroys.)

Polly (shuts door). What's that? (Coming R.C.)

Sam (pointing to table with pride). Furniture. How are you, my Polly? (kissing her). You look handsomer than ever this morning. (Dances and sings)

 “Tid-dle-di-tum-ti-di-do.”

Polly (L.). What’s the matter, Sam?—are you mad?

Sam (C.). No, ’appy—much the same thing.

Polly. Where have you been these two days?

Sam (all excitement). That’s just what I’m goin’ to tell yer. Polly, my pet, my brightest batswing and most brilliant burner, what do yer think?

Polly. Oh, do go on, Sam, or I’ll slap your face.

Sam. Well, then, you’ve ’eard me speak of old Binks, the plumber, glazier, and gasfitter, who died six months ago?

Polly. Yes.

Sam (sternly and deliberately). I’ve bought ’is business.

Polly. No!

Sam (excitedly). Yes, of ’is widow, old Mrs. Binks—so much down, and so much more at the end of the year. (Dances and sings up R.H.)

“ Ri-ti-toodle
 Roodle-oodle
 Ri-ti-tooral-lay.”

Polly. La, Sam!

Sam (pacing stage up and down). Yes; I’ve bought the goodwill, fixtures, fittin’s, stock, rolls of gas-pipe, and sheets of lead. (Jumps on table, R.H., quickly facing Polly.) Yes, Polly, I’m a tradesman with a shop—a master tradesman. (Coming to Polly seriously) All I want to complete the premises is a missus. (Tries to kiss her. She pushes him away.)

Polly. Sam, don’t be foolish!

Sam (arm round her waist). Come and be Mrs. Sam

Gerridge, Polly, my patent-safety-day-and-night-light. You'll furnish me completely.

(Polly goes up L.H., Sam watching her admiringly. He then sees slate, snatches it up and looks at it. She snatches it from him with a shriek, and rubs out writing, looking daggers at him, both L.C., Sam laughing.)

Sam. Only to think now.

(Putting arm round her waist, Polly pouting.)

Polly. Don't be a goose.

Sam (going towards table, R.H.). I spent the whole of yesterday lookin' up furniture. Now I bought that a bargain, and I brought it 'ere to show you for your approval. I've bought lots of other things, and I'll bring 'em all here to show yer for your approval.

Polly. I couldn't think what had become of you.

(Seated R. of table.)

Sam. Couldn't yer? Oh, I say, I want yer to choose the new paper for the little back parlour just behind the shop, you know. Now what d'yer think o' this?

(Fetching a pattern from piano and unrolling it, c.)

Polly (standing, L.C.). No, I don't like that. (Sam fetches the other, a flaming pattern.) Ah! that's neat.

Sam. Yes, that's neat and quiet. I'll new-paper it, and new-furnish it, and it shall all be bran-new.

(Puts paper on top of piano.)

Polly. But won't it cost a lot of mney?

Sam (bravely). I can work for it. With customers in the shop, and you in the back-parlour, I can work like fifty men. (Sits on table, R.H., beckons Polly to him, she comes L. of table R.H., Sam puts his arm round Polly, sentimentally.) Only fancy, at night, when the shop's closed, and the shutters are up, counting out the till together! (Changing his manner) Besides, that isn't all I've been doin'. I've been writin', and what I've written I've got printed.

Polly. No!

Sam. True.

Polly. You've been writing—about me?

(Delighted.)

Sam. No—about the shop. (Polly disgusted.) Here it is. (Takes roll of circulars from pocket of his canvas sloop.) Yer mustn't laugh—you know—it's my first attempt. I wrote it the night before last; and when I thought of you the words seemed to flow like—red-hot solder. (Reads) Hem! “Samuel Gerridge takes this opportunity of informin' the nobility, gentry, and inhabitants of the Borough Road——”

Polly. The Borough Road?

Sam. Well, there ain't many of the nobility and gentry as lives in the Borough Road, but it pleases the inhabitants to make 'em believe yer think so (resuming)—“of informin' the nobility, gentry, and inhabitants of the Borough Road, and its vicinity.” And “its vicinity.” (Looking at her) Now I think that's rather good, eh?

Polly. Yes. (Doubtfully) I've heard worse.

Sam. I first thought of saying neighbour'ood; but then vicinity sounds so much more genteel (resuming)—“and its vicinity, that 'e has entered upon the business of the late Mr. Binks, 'is relict, the present Mrs. B., 'avin' disposed to 'im of the same.” Now listen, Polly, because it gets interestin'—“S. G.——”

Polly. S. G. Who's he?

Sam (looking at Polly with surprise). Why, me. S. G.—Samuel Gerridge—me, us. We're S. G. Now don't interrupt me, or you'll cool my metal, and then I can't work. "S. G. 'opes that, by a constant attention to business, and"—mark this—"by supplyin' the best articles at the most reasonable prices, to merit a continuance of those favours which it will ever be 'is constant study to deserve." There! (Turning on table to R., triumphantly) Stop a bit—there's a little bit more yet. "Bell-'angin', gas-fittin', plumbin', and glazin', as usual." There!—it's all my own.

(Puts circular on mantelpiece and, crossing R.H., contemplates it.)

Polly. Beautiful, Sam. It looks very attractive from here, don't it?

Sam (postman's knock): There's the postman. I'll go. I shall send some of these out by post.

(Goes off R.D. and returns with letter.)

Polly (c. taking it). Oh, for Esther. I know who it's from. (Places letter on mantelpiece. At chair L. of table, L. Sam sits corner of table R.H., reading circular. Seriously) Sam, who do you think was here last night?

Sam (R.). Who?

Polly. Captain Hawtree.

Sam (deprecatingly). Oh, 'im!—come back from India, I suppose?

Polly. Yes; luckily Esther was out.

Sam. I never liked that long swell. He was a uppish, conceited—

Polly (sitting L., at end of table L.). Oh, he's better than he used to be—he's a major now. He's only been in England a fortnight.

Sam (L. 2). Did he tell yer anything about poor De Alroy?

Polly (leaning against table end). Yes; he said he was riding out not far from the cantonment, and was surrounded by a troop of Sepoy cavalry, which took him prisoner, and galloped off with him.

Sam. But about 'is death ?

Polly. Oh !—(hiding her face)—that he said was believed to be too terrible to mention.

Sam (crossing to Polly, R. of table L.). Did 'e tell yer anything else ?

Polly. No ; he asked a lot of questions, and I told him everything. How poor Esther had taken her widowhood, and what a dear, good baby the baby was, and what a comfort to us all, and how Esther had come back to live with us again.

Sam (sharply). And the reason for it ?

Polly (looking down). Yes.

Sam. How your father got all the money that 'e'd left for Esther.

Polly (sharply). Don't say any more about that, Sam.

Sam. Oh ! I only think Captain 'awtree ought to know where the money did go to, and you shouldn't try and screen your father, and let 'im suppose that you and Esther spent it all.

Polly. I told him—I told him—I told him.

(Angrily.)

Sam. Did you tell 'im that your father was always at 'armonic meetin's at taverns, and 'ad arf cracked 'isself with drink, and was always singin' the songs and makin' the speeches 'e 'eard there, and was always goin' on about 'is wrongs as one of the workin' classes ? 'E's a pretty one for one of the workin' classes, 'e is ! 'Asn't done a stroke o' work these twenty year. Now, I am one of the workin' classes, but I don't 'owl about it. I work, I don't spout.

Polly. Hold your tongue, Sam. I won't have you say any more against poor father. He has his faults, but he's a very clever man. (Sighing.)

Sam. Ah! What else did Captain Hawtree say?

Polly. He advised us to apply to Mr. D'Alroy's mother.

Sam. What! the Marquissy! And what did you say to that?

Polly. I said that Esther wouldn't hear of it. And so the Major said that he'd write to Esther, and I suppose this is the letter.

Sam. Now, Polly, come along and choose the paper for the little back parlour.

(Going towards table, R.H., and takes it up to wall behind door, R.H.)

Polly (rising). Can't! Who's to mind baby?

Sam. The baby? Oh, I forgot all about 'im. (Goes to cradle.) I see yer! (Goes to window casually.) There's your father comin' down the street. Won't 'e mind 'im?

Polly (going up, c.). I daresay he will. If I promise him an extra sixpence on Saturday. (Sam opens window.) Hi! Father! (Polly goes to cradle.)

Sam (aside). 'E looks down in the mouth, 'e does. I suppose 'e's 'ad no drink this mornin'.

(Goes to Polly.)

(Enter Eccles in shabby black. Pauses on entering, looks at Sam, turns away in disgust, takes off hat, places it on piano, and shambles across to L. Taking chair L. of table L., places it and sits before fire.)

Polly (goes to Eccles, down L. of table L.) Come in to stop a bit, father?

Eccles. No; not for long. (Sam comes down c.)

Good-morning, Samuel. Going back to work? That's right, my boy—stick to it. (Pokes fire.) Stick to it—nothing like it.

Sam (down R.C., aside). Now, isn't that too bad! No, Mr. Eccles. I've knocked off for the day.

Eccles (waving poker). That's bad! That's very bad! Nothing like work—for the young. I don't work so much as I used to, myself, but I like to (Polly sitting on corner of table up L.) see the young 'uns at it. It does me good, and it does them good too. What does the poet say?

(Rising, impressively, and leaning on table.)

“ A carpenter said tho' that was well spoke,
It was better by far to defend it with hoak.
A currier, wiser than both put together,
Said say what you will, there is nothing like labour.
For a' that, an' a' that,
Your ribbon, gown, an' a' that,
The rank is but the guinea stamp,
The working man's the gold for a' that.”

(Sits again, triumphantly wagging his head.)

Sam (aside). This is one of the public-house loafers, that wants all the wages and none of the work, an idle old——

(Goes in disgust to piano, puts on cap, and takes rolls of paper under his arm.)

Polly (to Eccles, L.H.). Esther will be in by-and-by. (Persuasive) Do, father!

Eccles. No, no. I tell you I won't!

Polly (whispering, arm round his neck). And I'll give you sixpence extra on Saturday.

(Eccles' face relaxes into a broad grin. Polly gets hat and cloak, peg up, R.H.)

Eccles. Ah! you sly little puss, you know how to get over your poor old father.

Sam (aside). Yes, with sixpence.

Polly (putting on bonnet and cloak at door). Give the cradle a rock if baby cries.

Sam (crossing to Eccles). If you should 'appen to want employment or amusement, Mr. Eccles, just cast your eye over this. (Putts circular on table L., then joins Polly at door.) Stop a bit, I've forgot to give the baby one.

(Throws circular into cradle. Exeunt, Polly first.)

Eccles takes out pipe from pocket, looks into it, then blows through it, making a squeaking noise, and finishes by tenderly placing it on the table. He then hunts all his pockets for tobacco, finally finding a little paper packet containing a screw of tobacco in his R.H. waistcoat pocket, which he also places on table after turning up the corner of the tablecloth for the purpose of emptying the contents of his R.H. pocket of the few remnants of past screws of tobacco on to the bare table and mixing a little out of the packet with it and filling pipe. He then brushes all that remains on the table into the paper packet, pinches it up, and carefully replaces it in R.H. waistcoat pocket. Having put the pipe into his mouth, he looks about for a light, across his shoulder and under table, though never rising from the chair; seeing nothing, his face assumes an expression of comic anguish. Turning to table, he angrily replaces tablecloth and then notices Sam's circular. His face relaxes into a smile, and, picking it up, he tears the circular in half, makes a spill of it, and lighting it at fire, stands with his back to fireplace and smokes vigorously.)

Eccles. Poor Esther! Nice market she's brought her pigs to—ugh! Mind the baby indeed! What good is he to me? That fool of a girl to throw away all her chances!—a honourable-hess—and her father not to have on him the price of a pint of early beer or a quartern of cool, refreshing gin! Stopping in here to rock a young honourable! Cuss him! (Business, puffs smoke in baby's face, L.H. of cradle, rocking it.) Are we slaves, we working men?
(Sings savagely.)

“ Britons never, never, never shall be——”

(Nodding his head sagaciously, sits R. of table L.) I won't stand this. I've writ to the old cat—I mean to the Marquissy—to tell her that her daughter-in-law and her grandson is almost starving. That fool Esther's too proud to write to her for money. I hate pride—it's beastly! (Rising) There's no beastly pride about me. (Goes up, L. of table, smacking his lips.) I'm as dry as a lime-kill. (Takes up jug.) Milk!—(with disgust)—for this young aristocratic pauper. Everybody in the house is sacrificed for him! (At foot of cradle, R.C., with arms on chair back) And to think that a working man, and a member of the Committee of the Banded Brothers for the Regeneration of Human Kind, by means of equal diffusion of intelligence and equal division of property, should be thusty, while this cub— (Draws aside curtain, and looks at child. After a pause) That there coral he's got round his neck is gold, real gold! (With hand on knob at end of cradle, R.C.) Oh, Society! Oh, Governments! Oh, Class Legislation!—is this right? Shall this mindless wretch enjoy himself, while sleeping, with a jewelled gawd, and his poor old grandfather want the price of half a pint? No! it shall not be! Rather than see it, I will myself resent this outrage on the rights of man! and in this holy crusade of class against class, of the weak and lowly against the powerful and strong—(pointing to child)—I will strike one blow for freedom! (Goes to back of cradle.) He's asleep. It will fetch ten bob round the corner; and if the Marquissy gives us anythink it can be got out with some o' that. (Steals coral) Lie still, my darling!—it's grandfather's a-watching over you—

“ Who ran to catch me when I fell,
And kicked the place to make it well?
My grandfather!”

(Rocking cradle with one hand; leaves it quickly, and as he takes hat off piano Esther enters. She is dressed as a widow, her face pale, and her manner quick and imperious. She carries a parcel and paper bag of rusks in her hand; she puts parcel on table, goes to cradle, kneels down and kisses child.) My lovey had a nice walk? You should wrap yourself up well—you're so liable to catch cold!

Esther. My Georgy?—Where's his coral? (Eccles, going door R., fumbles with the lock nervously, and is going out as Esther speaks.) Gone!—Father!—(rising—Eccles stops)—The child's coral—where is it?

Eccles (confused). Where's what, ducky?

Esther. The coral! You've got it—I know it! Give it me!—(quickly and imperiously)—Give it me! (Eccles takes coral from his pocket and gives it back.) If you dare to touch my child—

(Goes to cradle.)

Eccles. Esther! (Going quickly to piano and banging his hat on it) Am I not your father?

(Esther gets round to front of cradle.)

Esther. And I am his mother!

Eccles (coming to her). Do you bandy words with me, you pauper! you pauper!! you pauper!!! to whom I have given shelter—shelter to you and your brat! I've a good mind——

(Raising his clenched fist.)

Esther (confronting him). If you dare! I am no longer your little drudge—your frightened servant. When mother died—(Eccles changes countenance and cowers beneath her glance)—and I was so high, I tended you, and worked for you—and you beat me. That time is past. I am a woman—I am a wife—a widow—a mother! Do you think I will let you outrage him? (pointing to cradle). Touch me if you dare!

(Advancing a step.)

Eccles (bursting into tears and coming down R.C.). And this is my own child, which I nussed when a babby, and sung “Cootsicum Coo” to afore she could speak. (Gets hat from piano, and returns a step or two.) Hon. Mrs. De Alroy (Esther drops down behind chair R. of table L.), I forgive you for all that you have said. I forgive you for all that you have done. In everything that I have done I have acted with the best intentions. May the babe in that cradle never treat you as you have this day tret a grey-'aired father. May he never cease to love and honour you, as you have ceased to love and honour me, after all that I have done for you, and the position to which I 'ave raised you by my own industry. (Goes to door R.) May he never behave to you like the bad daughters of King Lear; and may you never live to feel how much more sharper than a serpent's (slight pause, as if remembering quotation) scale it is to have a thankless child! (Exit, R.D.)

Esther (kneeling back of cradle). My darling! (Arranging bed and placing coral to the baby's lips, and then to her own) Mamma's come back to her own. Did she stay away from him so long? (Rises, and looks at the sabre, etc.) My George! to think that you can never look upon his face or hear his voice. My brave, gallant, handsome husband! My lion and my love! (Comes down, c., pacing the stage.) Oh! to be a soldier, and to fight the wretches who destroyed him—who took my darling from me! (Action of cutting with sabre.) To gallop miles upon their upturned faces. (Crossing, L., with action—breaks down sobbing at mantelpiece—sees letter.) What's this?—Captain Hawtree's hand. (Sitting in chair, reads, at left hand of table) "My dear Mrs. D'Alroy,—I returned to England less than a fortnight ago. I have some papers and effects of my poor friend's, which I am anxious to deliver to you, and I beg of you to name a day when I can call with them and see you; at the same time let me express my deepest sympathy with your affliction. Your husband's loss was mourned by every man in the regiment. (Esther lays the letter on her heart, and then resumes reading.) I have heard with great pain of the pecuniary embarrassments into which accident and the imprudence of others have placed you. I trust you will not consider me, one of poor George's oldest comrades and friends, either intrusive or impertinent in sending the enclosed (she takes out a cheque), and in hoping that, should any further difficulties arise, you will inform me of them, and remember that I am, dear Mrs. D'Alroy, now, and always, your faithful and sincere friend, Arthur Hawtree." (Esther goes to cradle, and bends over it.) Oh, his boy, if you could read it ! (Sobs, with head on head of cradle.)

(Enter Polly, D.R.)

Polly. Father gone !

Esther. Polly, you look quite flurried.

(Polly laughs, and whispers to Esther.)

Esther (near head of table. Taking Polly in her arms and kissing her). So soon ? Well—my darling, I hope you may be happy.

Polly. Yes. Sam's going to speak to father about it this afternoon. (Crosses L., round table, and putting rusks in saucepan.) Did you see the agent, dear ?

Esther (sits R. of table). Yes ; the manager didn't come—he broke his appointment again.

Polly (sits L. of table). Nasty, rude fellow !

Esther. The agent said it didn't matter, he thought I should get the engagement. He'll only give me thirty shillings a week, though.

Polly. But you said that two pounds was the regular salary.

Esther. Yes, but they know I'm poor, and want the engagement, and so take advantage of me.

Polly. Never mind, Esther. I put the dress in that bandbox. It looks almost as good as new.

Esther. I've had a letter from Captain Hawtree.

Polly. I know, dear ; he came here last night.

Esther. A dear, good letter—speaking of George, and enclosing me a cheque for thirty pounds.

Polly. Oh, how kind ! Don't you tell father.

(Noise of carriage wheels without.)

Esther. I shan't.

(Eccles enters, breathless. Esther and Polly rise.)

Eccles. It's the Marquissy in her coach. (Esther puts on the lid of bandbox.) Now, girls, do be civil to her, and she may do something for us. (Places hat on piano.) I see the coach as I was coming out of the "Rainbow."

(Hastily pulls an old comb out of his pocket, and puts his hair in order.)

Esther. The Marquise!

(Esther comes down to end of table R., Polly holding her hand.)

Eccles (at door). This way, my lady—up them steps. They're rather awkward for the likes o' you; but them as is poor and lowly must do as best they can with steps and circumstances.

(Esther and Polly, L.H., at end of table.)

(Enter Marquise, D.R. She surveys the place with aggressive astonishment.)

Marquise (going down, R.; half aside). What a hole! And to think that my grandson should breathe such an atmosphere, and be contaminated by such associations! (To Eccles, who is a little up, R.C.) Which is the young woman who married my son?

Esther (L.). I am Mrs. George D'Alroy, widow of George D'Alroy. Who are you?

Marquise. I am his mother, the Marquise de Saint Maur.

Esther (with the grand air). Be seated, I beg.

(Eccles takes chair from R.C., which Esther immediately seizes as Sam enters with an easy-chair on his head, which he puts down, L.H., not seeing Marquise, who instantly sits down in it, concealing it completely.)

Sam (astonished, L. of Marquise). It's the Marquissy! (Looking at her) My eye! These aristocrats are fine women—plenty of 'em—(describing circle) quality and quantity!

Polly (L. of table end). Go away, Sam ; you'd better come back.

(Eccles nudges him, and bustles him towards door.

Exit Sam. Eccles shuts door on him.)

Eccles (coming down, R. of Marquise, rubbing his hands). If we'd a know'd your ladyship had bin a-coming we'd a had the place cleaned up a bit.

(With hands on chair-back, R. corner, down. He gets round to R. behind Marquise, who turns the chair slightly from him.)

Polly. Hold your tongue, father !

(Eccles crushed.)

Marquise (to Esther). You remember me, do you not ?

Esther. Perfectly, though I only saw you once. (Seating herself en grande dame, L.C.) May I ask what has procured me the honour of this visit ?

Marquise. I was informed that you were in want, and I came to offer you assistance.

Esther. I thank you for your offer, and the delicate consideration for my feelings with which it is made. I need no assistance.

(Eccles groans and leans on piano.)

Marquise. A letter I received last night informed me that you did.

Esther. May I ask if that letter came from Captain Hawtree ?

Marquise. No—from this person—your father, I think.

Esther (to Eccles). How dare you interfere in my affairs ?

Eccles (R.). My lovey, I did it with the best intentions.

Marquise. Then you will not accept assistance from me ?

Esther. No.

Polly (aside to Esther, holding her hand). Bless you, my darling! (Polly is standing beside her.)

Marquise. But you have a child—a son—my grandson. (With emotion.)

Esther. Master D'Alroy wants for nothing.

Polly (aside). And never shall.

(Eccles groans and turns on to piano.)

Marquise. I came here to propose that my grandson should go back with me.

(Polly rushes up to cradle.)

Esther (rising defiantly). What! part with my boy! I'd sooner die!

Marquise. You can see him when you wish. As for money, I——

Esther. Not for ten thousand million worlds—not for ten thousand million marchionesses!

Eccles (R. corner). Better do what the good lady asks you, my dear; she's advising you for your own good, and for the child's likewise.

Marquise. Surely you cannot intend to bring up my son's son in a place like this?

Esther. I do. (Goes up, to cradle.)

Eccles (R.). It is a poor place, and we are poor people, sure enough. We ought not to fly in the faces of our pastors and masters—our pastresses and mistresses.

Polly (aside). Oh, hold your tongue, do!

(Up at cradle.)

Esther (before cradle). Master George D'Alroy will remain with his mother. The offer to take him from her is an insult to his dead father and to him.

Eccles (aside). He don't seem to feel it, stuck-up little beast!

Marquise. But you have no money—how can you rear him?—how can you educate him?—how can you live?

Esther (tearing dress from bandbox). Turn Columbine—go on the stage again and dance!

Marquise (rising). You are insolent—you forget that I am a lady.

Esther. You forget that I am a mother. Do you dare to offer to buy my child—his breathing image, his living memory—with money? (Crosses to door, R., and throws it open.) There is the door—go!
(Picture.)

Eccles (to Marquise, who has risen, aside). Very sorry, my lady, as you should be tret in this way, which was not my wishes.

Marquise. Silence! (Eccles retreats, putting back chair; Marquise goes up to door, R.). Mrs. D'Alroy, if anything could have increased my sorrow for the wretched marriage my poor son was decoyed into, it would be your conduct this day to his mother.

(Exit, R.D.)

Esther (falling in Polly's arms). Oh, Polly! Polly!

Eccles (looking after her). To go away, and not to leave a sov behind her! (Running up to open door)
Cat! Cat! Stingy old cat!

(Almost runs to fire, L., sits, and pokes it violently; carriage wheels heard without.)

Esther. I'll go to my room and lie down. Let me have the baby, or that old woman may come back and steal him.

(Exit Esther, and Polly follows with the baby, D.R.)

Eccles. Well, women is the obstinatest devils as never wore horse-shoes. Children? Beasts! Beasts!

(Enter Sam and Polly, D.R.)

Sam (R.C.). Come along, Polly, and let's get it over at once. (Sam places cap on piano and goes to

R. of table L. Polly takes bandbox from table, and places it up L.H. corner.) Now, Mr. Eccles (Eccles turns suddenly, facing Sam), since you've been talkin' on family matters, I'd like to 'ave a word with yer, so take this opportunity to——

Eccles (waving his hand grandly). Take what you like, and then order more (rising, and leaning over table), Samuel Gerridge. That hand is a hand that never turned its back on a friend, or a bottle to give him.
(Sings, front of table.)

I'll stand by my friend,
I'll stand by my friend,
I'll stand by my friend,
If he'll stand to me—me, genelman !

Sam. Well, Mr. Eccles, sir, it's this——

Polly (aside, coming down, R. of Sam). Don't tell him too sudden, Sam—it might shock his feelings.

Sam. It's this : Yer know that for the last four years I've been keepin' company with Mary—Polly. (Turning to her and smiling. Eccles drops into chair R.C., as if shot.)

Eccles. Go it ! go it ! strike home, young man ! Strike on this grey head ! (Sings) " Britons, strike home ! " Here (tapping his chest), to my heart ! Don't spare me. Have a go at my grey hairs. Pull 'em—pull 'em out ! A long pull, and a strong pull, and a pull all together !

(Cries, and drops his face on arm, upon table.)

Polly (L. of table). Oh, father ! I wouldn't hurt your feelings for the world. (Patting his head.)

Sam (R.). No ; Mr. Eccles, I don't want to 'urt your feelings, but I'm a-goin' to enter upon a business. Here's a circ'lar. (Offering one.)

Eccles (indignantly). Circ'lars. What are circ'lars compared to a father's feelings?

Sam. And I want Polly to name the day, sir, and so I ask you—

Eccles. This is 'ard, this is 'ard. One of my daughters marries a soger. The other goes a-gasfitting.

Sam (annoyed). The business which will enable me to maintain a wife is that of the late Mr. Binks, plumber, glazier, etc.

Eccles (rising, sings). Air, "Lost Rosabelle"—

“ They have given thee to a plumber,
They have broken every vow,
They have given thee to a plumber,
And my heart, my heart is breaking now.”
(Drops into chair again.)

Now, genelman!

(Sam thrusts circulars into his pocket, and turns away angrily.)

Polly. You know, father, you can come and see me. (Leans over him, L.)

Sam (sotto voce). No, no. (Motions to Polly.)

Eccles (looking up). So I can, and that's a comfort. (Shaking her hand) And you can come and see me, and that's a comfort. I'll come and see you often—very often—every day (Sam turns up stage in horror), and crack a fatherly bottle (rising) and shed a friendly tear.

(Wipes eyes with dirty pocket-handkerchief, which he pulls from breast pocket.)

Polly. Do, father, do. (Goes up and gets tea-tray.)

Sam (with a gulp). Yes, Mr. Eccles, do.

(Goes to Polly and gesticulates behind tray.)

Eccles. I will. (Goes c.) And this it is to be a father. I would part with any of my children for their own good, readily—if I was paid for it. (Goes to R. corner ; sings) “ For I know that the angels are whispering to me ”—me, genelmen !

(Polly gets tea things.)

Sam (L. of Eccles). I'll try and make Polly a good husband, and anything that I can do to prove it (lowering his voice), in the way of spirituous liquors and tobacco (slipping coin into his hand, unseen by Polly) shall be done.

Eccles (lightening up and placing his L. hand on Sam's head)—

“ Be kind to thy father,
Wherever you be,
For he is a blessing
And credit to thee—thee, genelmen.”

(Gets c.) Well, my children—bless you, take the blessing of a grey-'air'd father. (Polly looking from one to the other. Eccles c. to Sam R.) Samuel Gerridge, she shall be thine. (Mock heroically, looking at money) You shall be his wife (looking at Polly), and you (looking at Sam) shall be her husband—for for a husband I know no fitter—no “ gas-fitter ” man. (Runs to piano and takes hat ; goes to door R., looks comically pathetic at Sam, R., and Polly ; L., puts on hat and comes towards c.) I've a friend waiting for me round the corner, which I want to have a word with ; and may you never know how much more sharper than a serpent's tooth it is to have a marriageable daughter. (Sings.)

“ When I heard she was married
I breathed not a tone,
The h'eyes of all round me
Was fixed on my h'own ;

I flew to my chamber
 To hide my despair,
 I tore the bright circlet
 Of gems from my hair.
 When I heard she was married,
 When I heard she was married—”
 (Breaks down. Exit, door R.)*

Polly (drying her eyes). There, Sam. I always told you that, though father had his faults, his heart was in the right place.

Sam. Poor Polly!

(Crosses to fireplace, L. corner. Knock at R. door.)

Polly (top of table). Come in!

(Enter Hawtree.)

Polly. Major Hawtree.

(Sam turns away as they shake hands, c. of stage.)

Hawtree (c.). I met the Marquise's carriage on the bridge. Has she been here?

(Sam at fire, with back to it.)

Polly. (L.C.). Yes.

Hawtree. What happened?

Polly. Oh, she wanted to take away the child.

(At head of table.)

Sam. In the coach.

(Polly sets tea things.)

Hawtree. And what did Mrs. D'Alroy say to that?

Sam. Mrs. D'Alroy said that she'd see her blow'd first! (Polly pushes Sam)—or words to that effect.

Hawtree. I'm sorry to hear this; I had hoped—however, that's over.

Polly (sitting L. of table). Yes, it's over; and I hope

* This Exit was afterwards abandoned with the author's permission, being somewhat of an anticlimax. The Exit is usually made at the words "marriageable daughter," Eccles breaking down in a comically hysterical manner and going out quickly.

we shall hear no more about it. Want to take away the child, indeed—like her impudence! What next! (Getting ready tea things) Esther's gone to lie down. I shan't wake her up for tea, though she's had nothing to eat all day.

Sam (head of table). Shall I fetch some shrimps?

Polly (L. of table). No. What made you think of shrimps?

Sam. They're a relish, and consolin'—at least, I always found 'em so. (Check lights, gradually.)

Polly. I won't ask you to take tea with us, Major—you're too grand.

(Sam motions approbation to Polly, not wanting Hawtree to remain.)

Hawtree (placing hat on piano). Not at all. I shall be most happy. (Aside) 'Pon my word, these are very good sort of people. I'd no idea—

Sam (points to Hawtree, who is R.). He's a-going to stop to tea—well, I ain't.

(Goes up to window and sits. Hawtree crosses and sits R. of table.)

Polly. Sam! Sam! (Pause—he says Eh?) Pull down the blind and light the gas.

Sam (L. of table). No, don't light up; I like this sort of dusk. It's unbusiness-like, but pleasant.

(Sam cuts enormous slice of bread, and hands it on point of knife to Hawtree. Cuts small lump of butter, and hands it on point of knife to Hawtree, who looks at it through eyeglass, then takes it. Sam then helps himself. Polly meantime has poured out tea in two cups, and one saucer for Sam, sugars them, and then hands cup and saucer to Hawtree, who has both hands full. He takes it awkwardly, and places it on table. Polly, having only one spoon, tastes Sam's tea, then stirs Haw- tree's, attracting his attention by so doing. He looks into his teacup. Polly stirs her own tea, and drops spoon into Hawtree's cup, causing it to spurt in his eye. He drops eyeglass and wipes his eyes.

Polly (making tea). Sugar, Sam!

(Sam takes tea and sits facing fire.)

Polly. Oh, there isn't any milk—it'll be here directly, it's just his time.

Voice (outside ; rattle of milk-pails). Mia-ooow!

Polly. There he is. (Knock at door, R.H.) Oh, I know; I owe him fourpence. (Feeling her pockets) Sam, have you got fourpence?

(Knock again, louder.)

Sam. No (his mouth full)—I ain't got no fourpence.

Polly. He's very impatient. Come in!

(Enter George, his face bronzed, and in full health. He carries a milk-can in his hand, which, after putting his hat on piano, he places on table.)

George. A fellow hung this on the railings, so I brought it in.

(Polly sees him, and gradually sinks down under the table R. Then Sam, with his mouth full, and bread-and-butter in hand, does the same, L. Hawtree pushes himself back a space, in chair, remains motionless. George astonished. Picture.)

George. What's the matter with you?

Hawtree (rising). George!

George. Hawtree! You here?

Polly (under table). O-o-o-o-oh! the ghost!—the ghost!

Sam. It shan't hurt you, Polly. Perhaps it's only indigestion.

Hawtree. Then you are not dead?

George. Dead, no. Where's my wife?

Hawtree. You were reported killed.

George. It wasn't true.

Hawtree. Alive! My old friend alive!

George. And well. (Shakes hands.) Landed this morning. Where's my wife?

Sam (who has popped his head from under table-cloth). He ain't dead, Poll—he's alive!

(Polly rises from under table slowly.)

Polly (pause; approaches him, touches him, retreats). George! (He nods.) George! George!

George. Yes! Yes!

Polly. Alive!—My dear George!—Oh, my dear brother!—(looking at him intensely)—Alive!—(going to him)—Oh, my dear, dear brother!—(in his arms)—how could you go and do so?

(Laughs hysterically.)

(George, L.C.; Hawtree, R.C.; Sam down, L.; George places Polly in his arms. Sam goes to Polly. Sam kisses Polly's hand violently. Hawtree comes up, stares—business. Sam goes L. with a stamp of his foot; Hawtree R.)

George. Where's Esther?

Hawtree. Here—in this house.

George. Here!—doesn't she know I'm back?

Polly. No; how should she?

George (to Hawtree). Didn't you get my telegram?

Hawtree. No; where from?

George. Southampton! I sent it to the Club.

Hawtree. I haven't been there these three days.

Polly (hysterically). Oh, my dear, dear, dear dead-and-gone!—come back all alive oh, brother George!

(George passes her down to R.C.)

Sam. Glad to see yer, sir.

George. Thank you, Gerridge. (Shakes hands.) Same to you—but Esther?

Polly (R.C., back to audience, and 'kerchief to her eyes). She's asleep in her room.

(George is going to D.R. ; Polly stops him.)

Polly. You mustn't see her !

George. Not see her !—after this long absence ?—why not ?

Hawtree. She's ill to-day. She has been greatly excited. The news of your death, which we all mourned, has shaken her terribly.

George. Poor girl ! poor girl !

Polly (down, R.C.). Oh, we all cried so when you died !—(crying)—and now you're alive again, I want to cry ever so much more ! (Crying.)

Hawtree. We must break the news to her gently and by degrees.

(Crosses behind, to fire, taking his tea with him.)

Sam. Yes. If you turn the tap on to full pressure, she'll explode !

(Sam turns to Hawtree, who is just raising cup to his lips and brings it down on saucer with a bang ; both annoyed.)

George. To return, and not to be able to see her—to love her—to kiss her ! (Stamps.)

Polly. Hush !

George. I forgot ! I shall wake her !

Polly. More than that—you'll wake the baby !

George. Baby !—what baby ?

Polly. Yours.

George. Mine ?—mine ?

Polly. Yes—yours and Esther's ! Why, didn't you know there was a baby ?

George. No !

Polly. La ! the ignorance of these men !

Hawtree. Yes, George, you're a father.

(At fireplace.)

George. Why wasn't I told of this? Why didn't you write?

Polly. How could we when you were dead?

Sam. And 'adn't left your address.

(Looks at Hawtree, who turns away quickly.)

George. If I can't see Esther, I will see the child. The sight of me won't be too much for its nerves. Where is it?

Polly. Sleeping in its mother's arms. (George goes to door R.; she intercepts him.) Please not! Please not!

George. I must! I will!

Polly. It might kill her, and you wouldn't like to do that. I'll fetch the baby; but oh, please don't make a noise. (Going up, R.) You won't make a noise—you'll be as quiet as you can, won't you? Oh! I can't believe it. (Exit Polly, R.D.)

(Sam dances breakdown and finishes up looking at Hawtree, who turns away astonished. Sam disconcerted; sits on chair R.H. of table; George at door.)

George. My baby; my ba—— It's a dream! You've seen it. (To Sam) What's it like?

Sam. Oh! it's like a—like a sort of—infant—white and—milky, and all that.

(Enter Polly, with baby wrapped in shawls. George shuts door and meets her, c.)

Polly. Gently, gently—take care! Esther will hardly have it touched.

(Sam rises and gets near to George.)

George. But I'm its father! (R.C.)

Polly. That don't matter. She's very particular.

George. Boy or girl?

Polly. Guess.

George. Boy! (Polly nods. George proud.) What's his name?

Polly. Guess.

George. George? (Polly nods.) Eustace? (Polly nods.) Fairfax? Algernon? (Polly nods; pause.) My names!

Sam (to George). You'd 'ardly think there was room enough in 'im to 'old so many names, would yer?

(Hawtree looks at him—turns to fire. Sam disconcerted again; sits R.C.)

George. To come back all the way from India to find that I'm dead, and that you're alive. To find my wife a widow with a new love aged—How old are you? I'll buy you a pony to-morrow, my brave little boy! What's his weight? I should say two pound nothing. My—baby—my—boy! (Bends over him and kisses him) Take him away, Polly, for fear I should break him.

(Polly takes child, and places it in cradle.)

Hawtree (crosses to piano. Passes Sam front—stares—business. Sam goes round to fireplace, flings down bread-and-butter in a rage and drinks his tea out of saucer). But tell us how it is you're back?—how you escaped? (Leaning up against piano.)

George (R.C., coming down). By-and-by. Too long a story just now. Tell me all about it. (Polly gives him chair, R.C.) How is it Esther's living here?

(Polly L. of George.)

Polly. She came back after the baby was born, and the furniture was sold up.

George. Sold up? What furniture?

Polly. That you bought for her.

Hawtree. It couldn't be helped, George—Mrs. D'Alroy was so poor.

George. Poor ! but I left her £600 to put in the bank !

Hawtree. We must tell you. She gave it to her father, who banked it in his own name.

Sam (L.). And lost it in bettin'—every copper.

George. Then she's been in want ?

Polly. No—not in want. Friends lent her money.

George (seated, R.C.). What friends ? (Pause ; he looks at Polly, who indicates Hawtree.) You ?

Polly. Yes.

George (rising, and shaking Hawtree's hand). Thank you, old fella. (Hawtree droops his head.)

Sam (aside). Now who'd ha' thought that long swell 'ad it in 'im ? 'e never mentioned it.

George. So Papa Eccles had the money ?

(Sitting R.C. again.)

Sam. And blued it ! (Sits on L. corner of table.)

Polly (pleadingly). You see, father was very unlucky on the racecourse. He told us that if it hadn't been that all his calculations were upset by a horse winning who had no business to, he should have made our fortunes. Father's been unlucky, and he gets tipsy at times, but he's a very clever man, if you only give him scope enough.

Sam. I'd give 'im scope enough !

George. Where is he now ?

Sam. Public-house.

George. And how is he ?

Sam. Drunk !

(Polly pushes him off table. Sam sits at fireplace up stage.)

George (to Hawtree). You were right. There is something in caste. (Aloud) But tell us all about it.

(Sits.)

Polly. Well, you know, you went away ; and then the baby was born. Oh ! he was such a sweet little thing, just like—your eyes—your hair.

(Standing L. of George, who is sitting R.C.)

George. Cut that !

Polly. Well, baby came ; and when baby was six days old, your letter came, Major (to Hawtree). I saw that it was from India, and that it wasn't in your hand (to George) ; I guessed what was inside it, so I opened it unknown to her, and I read there of your capture and death. I daren't tell her. I went to father to ask his advice, but he was too tipsy to understand me. Sam fetched the doctor. He told us that the news would kill her. When she woke up, she said she had dreamt there was a letter from you. I told her, No ; and day after day she asked for a letter. So the doctor advised us to write one as if it came from you. So we did. Sam and I and the doctor told her—told Esther, I mean—that her eyes were bad, and she mustn't read, and we read our letter to her ; didn't we, Sam ? But, bless you ! she always knew it hadn't come from you ! At last, when she was stronger, we told her all.

George (after a pause). How did she take it ?

Polly. She pressed the baby in her arms, and turned her face to the wall. (A pause.) Well, to make a long story short, when she got up she found that father had lost all the money you left her. There was a dreadful scene between them. She told him he'd robbed her and her child, and father left the house, and swore he'd never come back again.

Sam. Don't be alarmed—'e did come back.

(Sitting by fire, L.)

Polly. Oh yes ; he was too good-hearted to stop long from his children. He has his faults, but his good points, when you find 'em, are wonderful !

Sam. Yes, when you find 'em !

(Rises, gets bread-and-butter from table, and sits L. corner of table.)

Polly. So she had to come back here to us ; and that's all.

George. Why didn't she write to my mother ?

Polly. Father wanted her ; but she was too proud—she said she'd die first.

George (rising, to Hawtree). There's a woman ! Caste's all humbug. (Sees sword over mantelpiece.) That's my sword (crossing round, L.), and a map of India, and that's the piano I bought her—I'll swear to the silk !

Polly. Yes ; that was bought in at the sale.

George (to Hawtree). Thank ye, old fella !

Hawtree. Not by me—I was in India at the time.

George. By whom, then ? (George, c.)

Polly. By Sam. (Sam winks to her to discontinue.) I shall ! He knew Esther was breaking her heart about any one else having it, so he took the money he'd saved up for our wedding, and we're going to be married now—ain't we, Sam ?

Sam (rushing to George and pulling out circulars from pocket). And hope by constant attention to business to merit—— (Polly pushes him away to L.)

Polly. Since you died it hasn't been opened, but if I don't play it to-night, may I die an old maid ?

(Goes up. George crosses to Sam and shakes his hand, then goes up stage, pulls up blind, and looks into street. Sam turns up and meets Polly top of table.)

Hawtree (aside). Now, who'd have thought that little cad had it in him ? He never mentioned it. (Aloud) Apropos, George, your mother—I'll go to the square, and tell her of—— (Takes hat from piano.)

George. Is she in town? (At cradle.)

Hawtree. Yes. Will you come with me?

George. And leave my wife?—and such a wife!

Hawtree. I'll go at once. I shall catch her before dinner. Good-bye, old fellow. Seeing you back again, alive and well, makes me feel quite—that I quite feel—— (Shakes George's hand. Goes to door, then crosses to Sam, who has turned Polly's tea into his saucer, and is just about to drink; seeing Hawtree, he puts it down quickly, and turns his back.) Mr. Ger-ridge, I fear I have often made myself very offensive to you.

Sam. Well, sir, yer 'ave!

Hawtree (at bottom of table). I feared so. I didn't know you then. I beg your pardon. Let me ask you to shake hands—to forgive me, and forget it.

(Offering his hand.)

Sam (taking it). Say no more, sir; and if ever I've made myself offensive to you, I ask your pardon; forget it, and forgive me. (They shake hands warmly; as Hawtree crosses to door, recovering from Sam's hearty shake of the hand, Sam runs to him.) Hi, sir! When yer marry that young lady as I know you're engaged to, if you should furnish a house, and require anything in my way——

(Bringing out circular; begins to read it. Polly comes down, L., and pushes Sam away, against Hawtree. Sam goes and sits in low chair by fire-place, down stage, disconcerted, cramming circulars into his pocket.)

Hawtree. Good-bye, George, for the present. (At door) Bye, Polly. (Resumes his Pall Mall manner as he goes out.) I'm off to the square.

(Exit Hawtree, R.D.)

George (at cradle). But Esther?

Polly (meets George in c.). Oh, I forgot all about Esther. I'll tell her all about it. (R.C.U.S.)

George. How? (By door.)

Polly. I don't know; but it will come. Providence will send it to me, as it has sent you, my dear brother. (Embracing him) You don't know how glad I am to see you back again! You must go. (Pushing him. George takes hat off piano.) Esther will be getting up directly. (At door with George, who looks through keyhole) It's no use looking there; it's dark.

George (at door). It isn't often a man can see his own widow.

Polly. And it isn't often that he wants to! Now you must go. (Pushing him off.)

George. I shall stop outside.

Sam. And I'll whistle for you when you may come in. (L.)

Polly. Now—hush!

George (opening door wide). Oh, my Esther, when you know I'm alive! I'll marry you all over again, and we'll have a second honeymoon, my darling.

(Exit.)

Polly. Oh, Sam! Sam! (Commences to sing and dance. Sam also dances; they meet in c. of stage, join hands, and dance around two or three times, leaving Sam L. of Polly, near table. Polly going down, R.) Oh, Sam, I'm so excited, I don't know what to do. What shall I do—what shall I do?

Sam (taking up Hawtree's bread-and-butter). 'Ave a bit of bread-and-butter, Polly.

Polly. Now, Sam, light the gas; I'm going to wake her up. (Opening door, R.H.) Oh, my darling, if I dare tell you! (Whispering) He's come back! He's come back! He's come back! Alive! Alive! Alive! Sam, kiss me!

(Sam rushes to Polly, kisses her, and she jumps off, Sam shutting the door.)

Sam (dances shutter dance). I'm glad the swells are gone ; now I can open my safety-valve and let my feelin's escape. To think of 'is comin' back alive from India, just as I am goin' to open my shop. Perhaps he'll get me the patronage of the Royal Family. It would look stunnin' over the door, a lion and a unicorn a-standin' on their 'ind legs, doin' nothin' furiously, with a lozenge between 'em—thus. (Seizes plate on table, puts his left foot on chair R. of table, and imitates the picture of the Royal arms.) Polly said I was to light up, and whatever Polly says must be done. (Lights brackets over mantelpiece, then candles ; as he lights the broken one, he says) Why, this one is for all the world like old Eccles ! (Places candles on piano, and sits on music-stool.) Poor Esther ! to think of my knowin' 'er when she was in the ballet line—then in the 'onourable line ; then a mother—no, honourables is “mamas” —then a widow, and then in the ballet line again ! —and 'im to come back (growing affected)—and find a baby, with all 'is furniture and fittin's ready for immediate use (crossing back of table during last few lines, sits in chair L. of table)—and she, poor thing, lyin' asleep, with 'er eyelids 'ot and swollen, not knowin' that that great, big, 'eavy, 'ulking, overgrown dragoon is prowlin' outside, ready to fly at 'er lips, and strangle 'er in 'is strong, lovin' arms—it—it—it——

(Breaks down and sobs with his head upon the table.)

(Enter Polly.)

Polly. Why, Sam ! What's the matter ?

Shutter dance, A double shuffle or breakdown dance—“strictly, a double shuffle dance on the cellar trapdoor in a public-house.”

Sam (rises and crosses, R.). I dunno. The water's got into my meter.

Polly. Hush! here's Esther.

(Enter Esther, L.D. They stop suddenly. Polly, down stage.)

Sam (R., singing and dancing). "Tiddy-ti-tum," etc.

Esther (sitting near fire, L. of head of table, taking up costume and beginning to work). Sam, you seem in high spirits to-night?

Sam. Yes; yer see Polly and I are goin' to be married—and—and 'opes by bestowing a merit—to continue the favour——

Polly (who has kissed Esther two or three times). What are you talking about?

Sam. I don't know—I'm off my burner.

(Brings music-stool, R.C. Polly goes round to chair L. corner, facing Esther.)

Esther. What's the matter with you to-night, dear? (to Polly). I can see something in your eyes.

Sam. P'r'aps it's the new furniture!

(Sits on music-stool, R.)

Esther. Will you help me with the dress, Polly?

(They sit, Esther upper end, back of table, Polly facing her, at lower end.)

Polly (seated, L. of table). It was a pretty dress when it was new—not unlike the one Mille Delphine used to wear. (Suddenly clapping her hands) Oh!

Esther. What's the matter?

Polly. A needle! (Crosses to Sam, who examines finger.) I've got it!

Sam. What—the needle—in your finger?

Polly. No; an idea in my head!

Sam (still looking at finger). Does it 'urt?

Polly (c.). Stupid! (Sam still sitting on stool. Aloud) Do you recollect Mlle Delphine, Esther?

Esther. Yes.

Polly. Do you recollect her in that ballet that old Herr Griffenhaagen arranged?—"Jeanne la Folle; or, the Return of the Soldier"?

Esther. Yes; will you do the fresh hem?

Polly. What's the use? Let me see—how did it go? How well I remember the scene!—the cottage was on that side, the bridge at the back—then ballet of villagers, and the entrance of Delphine as Jeanne, the bride—tra-lal-lala-lala-la-la. (Sings and pantomimes, Sam imitating her.) Then the entrance of Claude, the bridegroom— (To Sam, imitating swell) How-de-do, how-de-do?

Sam (rising). 'ow are yer?

(Imitating Polly, then sitting again.)

Polly. Then there was the procession to church—the march of the soldiers over the bridge—(sings and pantomimes)—arrest of Claude, who is drawn for the conscription (business; Esther looks dreamily), and is torn from the arms of his bride, at the church porch. Omnes broken-hearted. This is Omnes broken-hearted. (Pantomimes.)

Esther. Polly, I don't like this; it brings back memories.

Polly (going to table, and leaning her hands on it, looks over at Esther). Oh, fuss about memories!—one can't mourn for ever. (Esther surprised.) Everything in this world isn't sad. There's bad news, and—and there's good news sometimes—when we least expect it.

Esther. Ah! not for me.

Polly. Why not?

Esther (anxiously). Polly!

Polly. Second Act! (This to be said quickly, startling Sam, who has been looking on the ground during last four or five lines.) Winter—the Village Pump. This is the village pump. (Pointing to Sam, seated by piano, on music-stool. Sam turns round on music-stool, disgusted.) Entrance of Jeanne—now called Jeanne la Folle, because she has gone mad on account of the supposed loss of her husband.

Sam. The supposed loss?

Polly. The supposed loss!

Esther (dropping costume). Polly!

Sam. Mind!

(Aside to Polly.)

Polly. Can't stop now! Entrance of Claude, who isn't dead, in a captain's uniform—a cloak thrown over his shoulders.

Esther. Not dead?

Polly. Don't you remember the ballet? Jeanne is mad, and can't recognize her husband; and don't till he shows her the ribbon she gave him when they were betrothed! A bit of ribbon! Sam, have you got a bit of ribbon? Oh, that crape sword-knot, that will do!

(Crosses down, R.C. Sam astonished.)

Esther. Touch that!

(Rising, and coming down, L.C.)

Polly. Why not?—it's no use now!

Esther (slowly, looking into Polly's eyes). You have heard of George—I know you have—I see it in your eyes. You may tell me—I can bear it—I can, indeed—indeed, I can. Tell me—he is not dead?

(Violently agitated.)

Polly. No!

Esther. No!

Polly. No!

Esther (whispers). Thank Heaven! (Sam turns on stool, back to audience.) You've seen him—I see you have!—I know it!—I feel it! I had a bright and happy dream—I saw him as I slept! Oh, let me know if he is near! Give me some sign—some sound—(Polly opens piano)—some token of his life and presence!

(Sam touches Polly on the shoulder, takes hat and exits, D.R. All to be done very quickly. Polly sits immediately at piano and plays air softly—the same air played by Esther, Act II., on the treble only.)

Esther (in an ecstasy). Oh, my husband! come to me! for I know that you are near! Let me feel your arms clasp round me!—Do not fear for me!—I can bear the sight of you!—(door opens showing Sam keeping George back)—it will not kill me!—George—love—husband—come, oh, come to me!

(George breaks away from Sam, and, coming down behind Esther, places his hands over her eyes; she gives a faint scream, and, turning, falls in his arms. Polly plays the bass as well as treble of the air, forte, then fortissimo. She then plays at random, endeavouring to hide her tears. At last strikes piano wildly, and goes off into a fit of hysterical laughter, to the alarm of Sam, who, rushing down as Polly cries, "Sam! Sam!" falls on his knees in front of her. They embrace, Polly pushing him contemptuously away afterwards. George gets chair, R.C., sits, and Esther kneels at his feet—he snatches off Esther's cap, and throws it up stage. Polly goes L. of George, Sam brings music-stool, and she sits.)

Esther. To see you here again—to feel your warm breath upon my cheek—is it real, or am I dreaming?

Sam (R., rubbing his head). No; it's real.

Esther (embracing George). My darling!

Sam. My darling! (Polly on music-stool, which Sam has placed for her. Sam, kneeling by her, imitates Esther—Polly scornfully pushes him away.) But tell us—tell us how you escaped.

George. It's a long story; but I'll condense it. I was riding out, and suddenly found myself surrounded and taken prisoner. One of the troop that took me was a fella who had been my servant, and to whom I had done some little kindness. He helped me to escape, and hid me in a sort of cave, and for a long time used to bring me food. Unfortunately he was ordered away; so he brought another Sepoy to look after me. I felt from the first this man meant to betray me, and I watched him like a lynx during the one day he was with me. As evening drew on, a Sepoy picket was passing. I could tell, by the look in the fella's eyes, he meant to call out as soon as they were near enough; so I seized him by the throat, and shook the life out of him.

Esther (L.). You strangled him?

George. Yes.

Esther. Killed him—dead?

George. He didn't get up again.

(Embraces Esther.)

Polly (to Sam). You never go and kill Sepoys.

(Pushes him over.)

Sam. No! I pay rates and taxes.

George. The day after, Havelock and his Scotsmen marched through the village, and I turned out to meet them. I was too done up to join, so I was sent straight on to Calcutta. I got leave, took a berth on the P. and O. boat ; the passage restored me. I landed this morning, came on here, and brought in the milk.

(Enter the Marquise, R.D. ; she rushes to embrace George, C. All rise, Sam putting piano stool back R. Polly and Sam R.H. corner, Esther in front of table L.)

Marquise. My dear boy !—my dear, dear boy !

Polly. Why, see, she's crying ! She's glad to see him alive, and back again.

Sam (profoundly). Well ! There's always some good in women, even when they're ladies.

(Goes up to window.)

(Polly puts dress in box, and goes to cradle, then beside Sam.)

Marquise (crossing to Esther, L.C.). My dear daughter, we must forget our little differences. (Kissing her) Won't you ? How history repeats itself ! You will find a similar and as unexpected a return mentioned by Froissart in the chapter that treats of Philip Dartnell——

George. Yes, mother—I remember. (Kisses her.)

Marquise (to George, aside). We must take her abroad, and make a lady of her.

George (R.C.). Can't, mamma—she's ready-made. Nature has done it to our hands.

Marquise (L.C. ; aside, to George). But I won't have the man who smells of putty (Sam, business at back. He is listening, and at the word "putty" throws his cap irritably on table R. of him. Polly pacifies him, and makes him sit down beside her on window), nor the man who smells of beer.

(Goes to Esther, who offers her chair, and sits in chair opposite to her. Marquise back to audience. Esther facing audience.)

(Enter Hawtree, pale.)

Hawtree. George! Oh, the Marchioness is here!

George. What's the matter?

Hawtree (R.). Oh, nothing! Yes, there is. I don't mind telling you. I've been thrown. I called at my chambers as I came along and found this.

(Gives George a note; sits on music-stool.)

George. From the Countess, Lady Florence's mother. (Reads) "Dear Major Hawtree,—I hasten to inform you that my daughter Florence is about to enter into an alliance with Lord Saxeby, the eldest son of the Marquis of Loamshire. Under these circumstances, should you think fit to call here again, I feel assured——" Well, perhaps it's for the best. (Returning letter) Caste! you know. Caste! And a marquis is a bigger swell than a major.

Hawtree. Yes, best to marry in your own rank of life.

George. If you can find the girl. But if ever you find the girl, marry her. As to her station—

"Kind hearts are more than coronets,
And simple faith than Norman blood."

Hawtree. Ya-as. But a gentleman should hardly ally himself to a nobody.

George. My dear fella, nobody's a mistake—he don't exist. Nobody's nobody! Everybody's somebody.

Hawtree. Yes. But still—caste.

George. Oh, caste's all right. Caste is a good thing if it's not carried too far. It shuts the door on the pretentious and the vulgar; but it should open the door very wide for exceptional merit. Let brains break through its barriers, and what brains can break through love may leap over.

Hawtree. Yes. Why, George, you're quite inspired—quite an orator. What makes you so brilliant? Your captivity? The voyage? What then?

George. I'm in love with my wife!

(Enter Eccles, drunk, a bottle of gin in his hand.)

Eccles (crossing to c.). Bless this 'appy company. May we 'ave in our arms what we love in our 'earts. (Goes to head of table. Esther goes to cradle, back to audience. Polly and Sam half amused, half angry. Marquise still sitting in chair, back to audience. Hawtree facing Eccles. George up stage leaning on piano in disgust.) Polly, fetch wine-glasses—a tumbler will do for me. Let us drink a toast. Mr. Chairman (to Marquise), ladies, and gentlemen—I beg to propose the 'elth of our newly returned warrior, my son-in-law (Marquise shivers) the Right Honourable George De Alroy. Get glasses, Polly, and send for a bottle of sherry wine for my ladyship. My ladyship! My ladyship! M'lad'ship. (She half turns to him.) You and me'll have a dram together on the quiet. So delighted to see you under these altered circum—circum—circum—stangate.

(Polly, who has shaken her head at him to desist, in vain, very distressed.)

Sam. Shove 'is 'ead in a bucket!

(Exit, in disgust, door R.)

Hawtree (aside to George). I think I can abate this nuisance—at least, I can remove it.

(Rises and crosses c., to Eccles, who has got round to R. side of table, leaning on it. He taps Eccles with his stick, first on R. shoulder, then on L., and finally sharply on R. Eccles turns round and falls on point of stick—Hawtree steadying him. George crosses behind, to Marquise, who has gone to cradle—puts his arm round Esther and takes her to mantelpiece.)

Hawtree. Mr. Eccles, don't you think that, with your talent for liquor, if you had an allowance of about two pounds a week, and went to Jersey, where spirits are cheap, that you could drink yourself to death in a year?

Eccles. I think I could—I'm sure I'll try.

(Goes up, L. of table, steadying himself by it, and sits in chair by fire, with the bottle of gin. Hawtree standing by fire. Esther and Polly stand embracing, C. As they turn away from each other—)

George (coming across with Esther). Come and play me that air that used to ring in my ears as I lay awake, night after night, captive in the cave—you know.

(He hands Esther to piano. She plays the air.)

Marquise (bending over the cradle, at end, R.). My grandson!

(Eccles falls off the chair in the last stage of drunkenness, bottle in hand. Hawtree, leaning one foot on chair from which Eccles has fallen, looks at him through eyeglass. Sam enters, and goes to Polly, B.C., behind cradle, and, producing wedding-ring from several papers, holds it up before her eyes. Esther plays until curtain drops.)
