Composed by John Percy

THE LAST HOUR of EVENING

From the Mysteries of Udolpho

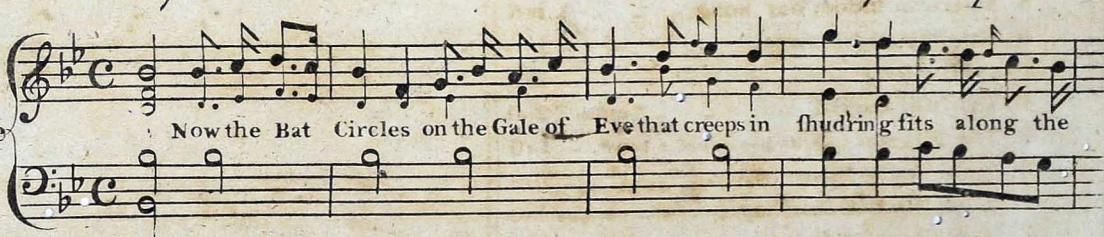

Most respectfully inscribed to Miss Agnes Willan. Pr. 1^s

Emily was particularly fond of walking in the Woods that hung on a promontory overlooking the Mediterranean, beneath their deep umbrage, the Eye paused over other Woods, towards the Sea; and on one side, through an Opening was seen A ruined Watch-tower standing on a point of Rock.

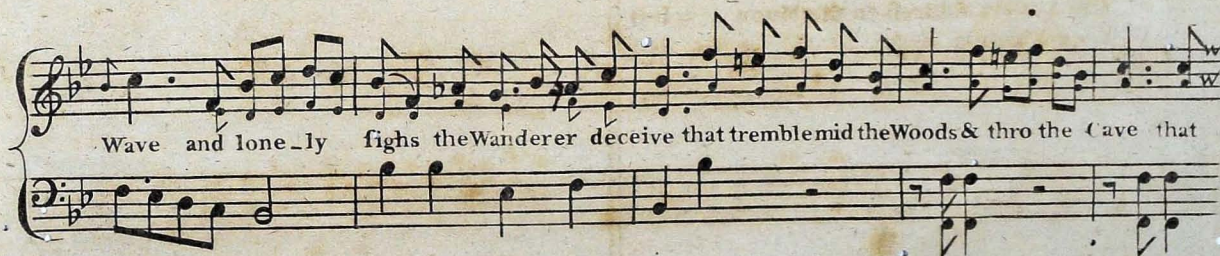

Hither Emily would come alone in the silence of Evening, watching in tranquil Melancholy, its gradual effect over the extensive prospect, and as her attentive Eye gazed on the mild blue of the Heavens where the first pale Star of the Evening appeared, She personified the hour in the following lines.

Printed for the Author N^o 13 Tavistock Street, Bedford Sq."

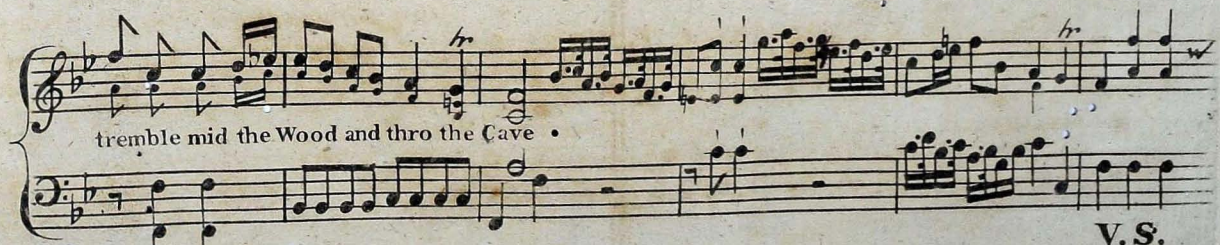

Andante

Now the Bat Circles on the Gale of Eve that creeps in shudd'ring fits along the Wave and lone-ly sighs the Wanderer deceive that tremble mid the Woods & thro the Cave that tremble mid the Wood and thro the Cave •

V. S.

John Percy

for oft when melancholy cheers his mind he thinks the Spirit of the Wood he hears nor listens nor listens but with sweet-ly

Dolce

sweetly thrilling fears to the low mystic murmers of the Wind to the low my-ftic myr more to the low mystic murmers of the Wind

Now the Bat

Cir-cles on the Gale of Eye and the filent dew falls glitt'ring round and o'er the Mountain Cliff the far dis-covered Skiff and gloo-my wave spreads her gray Veil of soft Har-mo-nious hue So falls o'er

Grief the dew of Pi-ty's tear dimming her lonely Visions of des-pair.
