INTRODUCTION

The Government of Madras took up for consideration the question of publication of the various manuscripts in different languages on subjects like Philosophy, Medicine, Science, etc., early in May 1948. Important Manuscripts Libraries in the Madras Presidency were requested to send a list of unpublished manuscripts with them for favour of being considered by the Government for publication. The Honorary Secretary of the Tanjore Maharaja Serfoji's Sarasvathi Mahal Library, Tanjore, alone complied with this request. This list as well as a similar list of unpublished manuscripts in the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras, were carefully examined and a tentative selection of manuscripts suitable for publication was made. The Government in their Memorandum No. 34913/ 48-10, Education, dated 4th April 1949, constituted an Expert Committee with the Curator of the Government Oriental Manuscripts Library, Madras, as the Secretary, for the final selection of manuscripts suitable for printing and for estimating the cost of publication.

It is hoped that the Publication of most of the important manuscripts will be completed within a few years.

Some of the manuscripts taken up for publication are represented by single copies in the Library and consequently the mistakes that are found in them could not be corrected by comparing them with other copies. The editors have, however, tried their best to suggest correct readings. When different readings are found, they have been given in the footnotes except in the case of a few books in which the correct readings have been given in the footnotes or incorporated in the text itself.

The Government of Madras have to be thanked for financing the entire scheme of publication although there is a drive for economy in all the departments. The thanks of the Library are due to the members of the Expert Commitee who spared no pains in selecting the manuscripts for publication. We have also to thank the various editors, who are experts in their own field, for readily consenting to edit the manuscripts and see them through the press. The various Presses that have co-operated in printing the manuscripts in the best manner possible also deserve thanks for the patience exhibited by them in carrying out the corrections made in the proofs.

The manuscripts on which this edition of the Nṛttaratnāvali is based are described in the Editor's learned Introduction.

PREFACE

The Nṛttaratnāvalī of the Kākatīya General Jāya-senāpati, edited here for the first time, is an important treatise which has interest to students not only of Nāṭya literature, but of Āndhra history also. My own interest in the work extends to over three decades. I read it first at the Sarasvati Mahal, Tanjore, where alone it was known to exist in two manuscripts, and gave a brief account of it in 1932 in my paper Later Sāṅgīta Literature[1], and later, in connection with my research work in the Madras University on the Abhinava-bhāratī, the Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa etc., a transcript[2] of the text was obtained from one of the Tanjore Mss. for the Madras Government Oriental Manuscripts Library by my revered Professor, MM. Prof. S. Kuppuswami Sastriar, Curator of the Library at that time. From time to time enthusiastic but infructuous attempts had been made to publish the work and I am glad, that at last it was possible for me to bring out a critical edition of it in the Madras Government Oriental Series. For including this valuable work in this Series, the authorities of the Series may well be congratulated.

When my edition of the text on the basis of its two Tanjore Mss. was progressing, I had to be absent from the country for nearly a year for a survey of Sanskrit manuscripts in European libraries, but the interruption in the work had its compensation in the coming to light of a third manuscript, though unfortunately incomplete, of the work in the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta. For having been able to use this third manuscript, I must thank my friend Prof. Chintaharan Chakravarti and the authorities of the Asiatic Society of Bengal. A further compensation was that during this period of unavoidable delay in the publication of this work, I could make a personal visit to the sites of the Kākatīya capital with which this work is associated and of other Kākatīya monuments having dance-sculptures. I could also, during this period, see and study again the sculptures of dance-karaṇas in Tanjore, Kumbhakonam and Chidambaram.

2. Described under R. 5659, Triennial Catalogue of Manuscripts, 1931-34 vol. VIII, Sanskrit, Madras Govt. Ori. Mss. Library.

To supplement my critical apparatus I had to utilise in manuscript or transcript many other dance-texts which I have mentioned in the Introduction. For affording me facilities to borrow these and keep some of them for the duration of my work on this edition, I have to express my gratitude to the authorities of the Sarasvati Mahal Library, Tanjore, and the Adyar Library, Adyar.

I must express my grateful thanks to the Vice-Chancellor and the authorities of the Madras University for permitting me to edit this work for the Madras Government Oriental Series.

For affording facilities to study the dance-sculptures, I must express gratitude to the Archaeological Departments of Hyderabad (Andhra Pradesh) and of India.

I have to thank also Sri N. R. Subbanna, M.A., Research Assistant and Kumari S. S. Janaki, M.A., M. Litt., Research Fellow, both of the Sanskrit Department, Madras University, for assistance in the reading of the proofs and the preparation of the Indexes.

Thanks are also due to the authorities of the Govt. Oriental Mss. Library, Madras and Sri Ramachandra Printing Works, Madras-14.

INTRODUCTION

I

MSS. MATERIAL

The present edition of the Nṛttaratnāvalī is based on three manuscripts, two full ones in the T. M. S. S. M. Library, Tanjore, and a fragment in the Asiatic Society of Bengal, Calcutta. The following are the details about these mss. referred to in the foot-notes as A, B and C.

A. This is a Telugu Palm-leaf ms. in the T. M. S. S. M. Library, Tanjore, bearing the old Burnell no. 11540 and described under no. 10672 of the new Descriptive Catalogue of the Library, vol. XVI. The ms. is highly corrupt and generally worse than the other Tanjore ms. noted below, though occasionally better than the latter and very helpful. The copy in this ms. had been revised by someone and some corruptions have been marked and emendations noted. In this and the second Tanjore ms. also, even where the lettering is correct, wrong spacings and separations of words cause trouble by creating misleading readings.

B. Another Telugu Palm-leaf ms. in the same Library, Burnell no. 11541, new Descriptive Catalogue no. 10673. This is also full of mistakes. The Transcript in the Madras Govt. Oriental Mss. Library and my basic copy are from this manuscript.

Both A and B have gaps, short and long; though a few of these are common to both and have necessitated my leaving a gap in the text presented and reproducing in the footnotes the corresponding portions from Bharata or some later writer, there are some places where the break in one ms. is made good by the other.

C. This is a fragmentary Devanagari paper manuscript belonging to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, noted on p. 58 (No., 1112) of the "Alphabetical List of Mss. purchased for the Government of Bengal upto 1891" and printed at the end of vol. XI of Notices of Sanskrit Manuscripts by H. P. Shastri, Calcutta, 1895. In the course of his preparation of the description of this manuscript for the further volumes of the Descriptive Catalogue of Sanskrit Manuscripts in the Asiatic Society, Prof. Chintaharan Chakravarti drew my attention to it and thanks to the help of the authorities of the Society, I could borrow the manuscript. This ms. extends from about the beginning of chapter IV, starting exactly at verse 11, near the end of its first half,[1] to about the middle of chapter VII, ending exactly at verse 132, near the end of the first half of the verse.[2] It bears the library number 1112-57-D.6; as its sheets are numbered 9 to 30, the text in the original ms. itself could have started only from about, the middle of chapter III. The ms., as can be seen from the footnotes at the relevant places in the present edition, is not free from gaps, but luckily some of the gaps in both A and B could be filled up with its help. The writing of the ms. is extremely difficult; apart from indication of e, āi, o and au by daṇḍas on the sides and the absence of anusvāra, the letter-formations are not normal; the original had not been read properly by the scribe and spelling mistakes also abound in the ms. However, taken together with A and B, it proved to be of inestimable assistance and I should say, the places where none of the three mss. could be helpful were comparatively few.

II

EXTERNAL TESTIMONIA

In technical subjects and branches of knowledge of an out of the way nature, a perusal of the literature shows two features which students of textual criticism and editors of works have to bear in mind; while on the one hand, the scribes tend to commit a number of mistakes in respect of the unfamiliar technical terms, on the other, the texts themselves tend to repeat or re-cast earlier ones and are, for the same reason, likely to be drawn upon heavily by later writers on the subject. As a result of the first factor, the question of the availability of adequate mss. and the importance of ms.-evidence get modified, for even in the face of a corrupt reading attested by all the mss. collated, one has to resort to the concerned Śāstra itsef and the light of other related texts. This light from outside helps in two ways: (1) Emendation of the corrupt passage, and (2) Justification or restoration of the lectio difficilior without understanding which the scribe had over-simplified his text. It is while resorting more to these two, emendation and restoration of the difficult but correct reading, that one has to equip oneself with adequate and helpful external testimonia in the form of allied works on the subject to which the text on hand is related, as a derivative on one side and a source on the other. It becomes most helpful when as a result of extensive study, one is able to trace the track of the borrower 's feet, so to say, and establish, similar to the stemma codicum of mss., a complementary literary geneology of texts.

In the present case, I have, as can be seen from the footnotes, supplemented the help I got from the two and a half defective mss. with that of a good number of allied Nāṭya works in print as well as in ms. A full list of these texts used as additional testimonia is included in the general bibliography, but here it is necessary to describe specially those that are still in ms. and whose procurement was necessary for the work.

1. The music and dance sections of the Abhilaṣitārthacintāmaṇi or Mānasollāsa of King Someśvara of Kalyāṇ, compiled in A.D. 1131. Jāya expressly refers to Someśvara. I used my own collated transcript of these two sections of Someśvara's work in two mss. of it in the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona, nos. 115 and 116 of 1873-74.

2. The Saṅgītasamayasāra of Pārśvadeva. This text has been printed in a very unsatisfactory manner in the Trivandrum Sanskrit Series and I used for my work the transcripts and collations I have made from three mss. of this text for the critical edition of Pārśvadeva's treatise which I am preparing. The Saṅgītasamayasāra is particularly noteworthy for its Deśī-material and Deśī-terminology in music and dance, and as Jāya devotes a special section to Deśī-nṛtta, Pārśvadeva was of some use in tackling this most difficult part of the work, namely the Deśī-nṛtta.

3. The Nṛtyaratnakoṣa or the dance-chapter of Kumbhakarṇa's (or Kalāsena's) Saṅgītarāja or Saṅgītamimāṁsā. While toiling with my mss., I discovered from some allied material that Kumbha had used Jāya. It is highly interesting to note this textual relationship as the two writers were geographically separated. The circumstance proves the phenomenon, borne out by other evidences[1] in the literary history of Nāṭya Śāstra, that North Indian writers looked to South India as a repository of tradition and a source of textual material which they made efforts to gather when they started on their own labours. This is proved further, in the present case, by the existence of a Devanagari ms. copy of our Nṛttaratnāvalī. The ms. of the dance-chapter of Saṅgītarāja I used is a transcript from its Baroda Oriental Institute ms. (no. 9931) belonging to Mr. Alain Danielou.

4. The Saṅgīta Cintāmaṇi of Vemabhūpāla alias Vīranārāyaṇa. As I progressed in my editorial work, I discovered also that among works which had used Jāya's treatise, the Saṅgīta Cintāmaṇi of Vema (1402-1420 A. B.) was likely to be one, which, as its Telugu provenance would make it most natural, stood in a special relation of indebtedness to the Nṛttaratnāvalī. Vema's work is known to exist only in the Palace Library, Trivandrum.[1] I borrowed its transcript in the possession of Mr. Alain Danielou.[2]

1. See Descriptive Catalogue of H. H. the Maharaja's Palace Library, where two mss. of it are described under nos. 1417 and 1418.

2. From time to time, scholars, particularly Telugu historians, have evinced interest in this work; as so far no detailed examination of the Trivandrum mss. of this work has been published, I am giving here some important data about the mss. based on my scrutiny of Mr. Danielou's transcript which has been made out of ms. No. 1417.

The text is incomplete in this ms., breaking off towards the end of ch. 16 with the Persian Mattalli dance, without completing the description of the Deśī-dance varieties. Ms. 1418 is also similarly incomplete, the text there breaking off a little before, with the opening lines of the description of the Mahārāshtrian Deśī-dance Caila-nṛtta. Leaves are also in disorder and in the middle, there are small and large gaps. As the ms. opens, (the second ms. has the same beginning as the first), we have the treatment of Tata-vādya in the Vādya-vibhāga which is really ch. 3. The Vādya-vibhāga ends with ch. 6. and owing to the disorder of the leaves we have the sequence of chs. 1-2 and 4-6 after ch. 3 on Tata. Ch. 1 deals with Mārga-tālas, ch. 2 Deśī-tālas, ch. 4 Suṣira, ch. 5 Avanaddha and Ghana and ch. 6 Vādya-prabandhas. Then follows the Nṛtta-vibhāga: the chapter-numbering 'three' here is wrong. In this dance section of the work which forms the bulk of the ms., as it is, there is a large gap in chs. 1-3; after the beginning portions of ch. 1, the greater part of the treatment of Rasas in ch. 1, the whole of ch. 2 dealing with the further topics of Rasa, Vibhāva, Anubhāva, Vyabhicāribhāva etc. and the different kinds of Nāyaka and the beginning of ch. 3, dealing with Nṛtya are lost; i.e., in ch. 3, in the treatment of the six Aṅgas of Āṅgikābhinaya, the whole of Śiras and the beginning of Hasta are lost. In the latter part of the Nṛtta-vibhāga, the transcript marks ch. 13 as wanting; but an examination and comparison of this section with the enumeration of topics in ch. 1 show that in reality the former and greater part of ch. 13 dealing with Purvaraṅga are available though under the wrong heading of ch. 14. It is the latter part and end of ch. 13 and the former part of ch. 14 that are really missing. This analysis discloses that we have yet to recover in ms. the actual music-portion, Gīta-vibhāga, of Vema's work.

To trace and check up different views, mata-bhedas, Deśī-varieties under different heads, and the technical terms, some other dance-mss. were also used by me. These represented texts which, though in no patent kinship with the Nṛttaratnāvalī, were of general help. In this class were:

5. The Saṅgītasudhākara of Haripāla.[1] Two volumes, R. Nos. 779 and 3082, Madras Govt. Oriental Mss. Library.

6. The Saṅgītanārāyaṇa of the Parlakhimidi King Nārāyaṇa.[2] I used for this the two volumes of the transcript of its ms. in the Madras Govt. Oriental Mss. Library (R. Nos. 3234 and 4212) and a transcript with Mr. Danielou.

7. The Saṅgītamuktāvalī of Devendra.[3] I am thankful to the authorities of the Sarasvati Mahal Library, Tanjore, for lending me their transcript volumes of this [4] and the other dance-mss. of that Library mentioned below:

Of the later works which definitely quote the Nṛtyaratnāvalī the one that I know and have used in two places is the Saṅgītasārāmṛta of the Tanjore Maratha King Tulaja whose dance-chapter discovered and published by me has citations of two passages from Jāya's work.[1]

With the aid of all these materials, I have presented, I hope, a satisfactory text and only a few more places remain which could be further improved, if more such materials were available. The entire critical apparatus is set forth at the foot of each page and attention is also invited to some additional textual notes given at the end of the text.

THE AUTHOR AND HIS PATRON

The Nṛttaratnāvalī edited here is, as already mentioned in the Preface, an important work of interest to both students of Nāṭya and Āndhra history. Its author is Jāya who describes himself in the colophons as the Senāpati and Gaja-sādhanika of Mahārāja Gaṇapatideva.[2] At the beginning of the work there is an eulogy on the author and the patron which tells us that King Gaṇapati, noting his intelligence, devotion and loyalty, took Jāyana, the author, even as the latter was a boy, and placed him under Minister Guṇḍa to be educated and trained.[3] In the course of the work, the verse I. 16 refers to the author as Jāyasenāpati, II. 346 as Jāya-camūpa, III. 68 as Jāyanārya, III. 198 as Gajasainyanātha, IV. 1 as Jāyana, V. 2 as Danti-sainyapati, and VIII. 83, the concluding verse, as *Jāya-senādhināth*a. Apart from these, the author gives us the most important historical information of the actual date of the work in the beginning of ch. V. This chapter which opens the treatment of Deśī-nṛtta says that the author would describe the local and regional dances as prevalent at the time when King Gaṇapati was ruling[1], and taking this occasion, he mentions, a few verses earlier, the year in which he wrote the Nṛttaratnāvalī, -Kali 4355, cyclic year Ānanda,[2] i.e. A.D. 1253–4. From history and epigraphy, we know that Gaṇapati is the Kākatīya ruler of that name and the author Jāya, the commander of his elephant-forces (Gajasādhanika).

The Kākatīyas[3] are one of the major dynasties of the Andhra country to build up an empire and carve out a place for themselves not only in the political history of the land but in the more lasting contributions that the Telugu country made in the cultural field. The Kākatīyas, like similar dynasties which rose to power, had humble beginnings, having been feudatories of the Eastern Cālukyas of Veṅgi, and as in the case of royal houses in other parts of the country, enjoyed a spell of glory for about three centuries. Towards the end of the twelfth century, the Yādavas of Devagiri rose in power and developed as rivals of the Kākatīyas on the western side of the Deccan. In 1195, Kākatīya Rudradeva died at the hands of the Yādava Jaitrasiṁha. He was succeeded by his brother Mahādeva, who after a short and not very eventful reign (1195–98) obviously died at the hands of the same Yādava King with whom he was waging war. Mahādeva's young son Gaṇapati became a captive at the Yādava court but was soon released by Jaitrasiṁha and restored to his kingdom. Though we might reckon Gaṇapati's reign from 1198 itself, official records mentioning him appear only from 1202 A.D.[1] From this time onwards it was one continuous success, consolidation and extension of the power of the Kākatīyas. Gaṇapati proved an effective check on even the Yādavas and made his prowess felt on Kalinga as well as the Kāñcī-maṇḍala. But the most important achievement of Gaṇapati is the subjugation of the minor chieftains within Andhra and the internal consolidation of the Telugu country. Gaṇapati may well be claimed as the first Telugu King to have unified the Telugu peoples and established an Andhra empire as such, and the description of this King at the beginning of ch.V (p. 159) of our text reflects truly his military glory.

Among the local chiefs Gaṇapati subdued were the Ayya family holding the Kṛṣṇa delta as subordinates of the Velanāḍu rulers. Pinacoḍi of this family had three sons, the middle of whom was Jāya or Jāyana, and two daughters. Gaṇapati married these daughters of the Ayya chief and brought the valorous Jāya under his control by making him the commander of the imperial elephant-corps. The association of Gaṇapati and Jāya are seen from A.D. 1213 onwards, when Gaṇapati according to an inscription granted the Chebrolu village to Jāya.[2] That Gaṇapati evinced a paternal interest in Jāyana from the latter's boyhood is expressly mentioned in the Nṛttaratnāvalī:

आकौमाराद् गणपतिनृपो जायनं यं समर्च्य। (I. 13) and this is supported by one of the verses (no. 36) in the Gaṇapeśvaram inscription of Jāya of Śaka 1153 in which, as in the Chebrolu epigraph, a full account of Jāya's family is given.[3] The relevent verse, which is very close to the expression in the Nṛttaratnāvalī-verse, runs thus :

तदनुजमतिसौम्याकारमाकारलक्ष्यैः
सुविनयनयदाक्ष्यस्थैर्यगाम्भीर्यशौर्यैः।
शिशुमपि गरिमाणं प्रापितं जायनाख्यं

3. See the edition of this inscription by Hultzsch in Epi. Ind. III, pp. 82–93.

The previous verse refers to King Gaṇapati marrying the two Ayya sisters, Nāramā and Peramā and this one refers to Jāya as their younger brother (anuja) and very young in age (śiśu). [1] The King honoured him (samarcya) even as a boy according to our text ; in corroboration of this we read in the above inscription :

ततः प्रसन्नश्चरितैर्मुदास्मै
प्रादात् क्षितीशः खलु जायनाय ।
आन्दोलिकाच्छत्रसनाथचिह्नैः
सेनाधिपत्यं गजसाधनित्वम् ॥ 37 ॥

Verse 39 speaks again of our author as a Kumāra at that time ;

सुरेश्वरेणेव निजेश्वरेण
सेनाधिपत्याधिकृतो विभाति ।
जायः कुमारो विबुधैः परीतः
संप्राप्तशक्तिः परवीरहन्ता ॥

We noted that according to the Nṛttaratnāvali young Jāya was placed by King Gaṇapati under Guṇḍāmātya for education. From Gaṇapati's inscriptions, we know of no minister as such named Guṇḍa, but we hear of an earlier general, Senāpati, named Guṇḍa who was, however, of the Malyāla family[2] and thus could not have been the minister. Among the subordinates of Gaṇapati were the Brāhman chiefs of the Indalūri family who contributed ministers to the court ; Gaṇapati's minister Soma, from this family, had a brother Gaṇṇa who also was probably a minister at the court ; but it would be too much to suppose that Guṇḍāmātya in our mss. is a corruption of Gaṇṇāmātya.

There is only one other Guṇḍa whom we can mention in this connection. As will be seen from the account of Sanskrit literature under the Kākatīyas which follows, there flourished under Pratāparudra a Guṇḍaya, in charge of the Brahmans and a scholar in Veda, Śāstra and Smṛti and author of a commentary on the Khaṇḍana

1. From this we are led to surmise that Jāya came to Gaṇapati even before 1213, the date of the earliest epigraph to mention them together. Mr. M. Somasekhara Sarma draws my attention to the fact that the conquest of Dvīpa (Divi) by Gaṇapati was effected long before the Chebrolu inscription and the Ayya family who were in Divi as the subordinates of the last Velanāṭi chief should have therefore come into contact with Gaṇapati before 1213.
2. Corpus of Ins. in the Tel. Dts., Pt. I. pp. 140 ff.

of Śrīharṣa. But from 1213 or thereabouts when young Jāya was placed under a Guṇḍāmātya by Gaṇapati to C. 1300 when Pratāparuda was ruling, it is really a far cry and Guṇḍa who was already a respected teacher and minister in 1213 cannot normally be expected to be still in harness at C. 1300.

With the help of the above mentioned subordinates and officials, Gaṇapati enjoyed a glorious rule for sixty-four years. He passed away in 1262 A.D. and already his daughter and successor Rudrāmbā had begun to exercise joint rule from 1258 onwards. 1261 A.D. registers Gaṇapati's last official record, issued jointly with his daughter.

Naturally the long and successful reign of Gaṇapati was attended with much artistic and literary activity. Our own author Jāyasenāpati wrote the work Nṛttaratnāvalī on dance, and therein at the end of ch.V., he refers to a companion work of his on pure music, Gītaratnāvalī :

स चास्माभिः स्फुटं गीतरत्नावल्यां प्रपञ्चितः। (p. 172)

It is said in some quarters that Jāya wrote similarly a Vādyaratnāvalī separately ; but no evidence is cited for this.

IV

SANSKRIT LITERATURE UNDER THE KAKATIYAS

The Kākatīyas, like other dynasties elsewhere, extended liberal patronage to Sanskrit scholars and poets. Their inscriptions comprise a large number in highly ornate Sanskrit poetic style, a few of which display even the difficult bandhas and such feats as the omission of particular letters, niṣkaṇṭhya, niroṣṭhya etc.[1] They are occasioned by endowments of villages for Sanskrit scholars and among subjects forming the speciality of these donees are to be met with different branches of Sanskrit literature. Some at least of the Sanskrit works of this period are very important, e.g., our Nṛttaratnāvalī itself, while some others have become very popular, e.g., the Alaṅkāra work Pratāparudrayaśobhūṣaṇa.[2] The last mentioned, which is also the best known work produced under these rulers, was written by poet Vidyānātha in praise of King Pratāparudra, 1296–1323, the last of the Kākatīya rulers under whom the kingdom extended to its utmost, from Siṁhācalam to Kāñcī.[1] On the basis of a verse in which Vidyānātha compares himself to sage Agastya,[2] some scholars have been holding the view that poet Agastya Paṇḍita and Vidyānātha are identical. Agastya, of course, is a well-known and prolific poet of this time, credited with seventy-four works,[3] out of which three alone are now available, the Bālabhārata, a mahākāvya, the Nalakīrtikaumudī, a khaṇḍa-kāvya in four cantos, and the Kṛṣṇacarita, a prose work. Agastya was the teacher of the royal poetess Gaṅgā Devī of the Vijayanagara court who wrote the Madhurāvijaya or Vīra-Kamparāyacarita, and maternal uncle of the brothers Viśvanātha who wrote the play Saugandhikāharaṇa[4] and Narasiṁha who dramatised the Kādambarī in his Kādambarikalyāṇa-nāṭaka.[5] Viśvanātha's Saugandhikāharaṇa mentions King Pratāpa-rudra in the Prologue. Viśvanātha and Narasiṁha were sons of Gaṅgādhara Kavi, the sister's husband of Agastya and according to the information given by Gaṅgā Devī in her Madhurāvijaya (I. 15), Gaṅgādhara wrote a drama on the Mahābhārata theme, a play yet to be discovered or identified. That patronage was extended to Jainism is seen from the Jain work Jinendrakalyāṇābhyudaya[6] or Arhatpratiṣṭhā written in Pratāparudra's time by Appayārya,[7] pupil of Puṣpasenācārya; the work was completed on Sunday January 20th, 1320 A.D. at the Kākatīya capital Warangal. In Telugu, there is the Nītiśāstramuktāvalī of Baddena which is said to be based on a Nītisāra in Sanskrit written by King Pratāparudradeva: in the South Indian Sanskrit anthology, the Suktiratnahāra[8] of Kāliṅgarāya Surya, a number of gnomic verses are extracted from a work called Pratāparudrīya which is likely to be the Nītisāra.[1] The poet Śākalya Malla(u) Bhaṭṭa is also placed in Pratāparudra's court and a Vīra-Bhallaṭa Deśika is also likewise mentioned;[2] of these, the former was son of Mādhava and composed the Udāttarāghava Kāvya,[3] which judging from its two commentaries,[4] seems to have gained some renown. Śākalya Malla is credited also with the composition of a Niroṣṭhya Rāmāyaṇa.[5] Vīra Bhallaṭa Deśika seems to have been proficient in Nāṭya śāstra.[6] Like the Nītiśāstramuktāvalī, the Telugu Krīḍābhirāma is said to be based on a Sanskrit original which can be referred to this period, viz. the Premābhirāma of Rāvipāṭi Tripurāntaka. The Kolani family of chiefs who were, before their conquest of Kolanuvīḍu, called the Indulūri chiefs, were ministers, generals and elephant commanders under the Kākatīyas.[7] In the time of King Gaṇapati, one Soma-mantrin of this family was the King's minister; Soma had a brother Peda Ganna; the former had the son Manuma Ganna whose son was Kolani Rudradeva who was a powerful general under Pratāparudradeva. This general Rudradeva is credited with a metrical grammatical work of the form of a commentary, called Rājarudrīya or Ślokavārttika-vyākhyā. In this work of which there are two mss., an original and a transcript, in the Madras Govt. Oriental Library, R. 3912 (a) and R. 5565, the author describes himself as the chief commander, as also the custodian of the Seal, under Kākatīya Pratāparudra: आदिराज-काकतीय-प्रतापरुद्रप्रधानिवर्यस्य मुद्राक-न्न(ग)न्नय(सू)नुराजिते(रचिते) वार्तिकव्याख्यानम्। (cf. R. 3912 (a), palmleaf ms. in Telugu script). The identity of the author is also clear from the mention of the author as Gannayya-sūnu; and from the geneology furnished in the Śivayogasāra, Kolani Rudradeva, the author, is known to be the son of Manuma Ganna, commander of Rudramadevī, and son of Soma, minister of Kākatīya Ganapati. The Rājarudrīya is an interesting work in grammar, offering a gloss on the Ślokavārttikas, i.e., those metrical dicta of a Vārttika character quoted by Patañjali which from Bhartṛhari, Kaiyaṭa and Nāgoji are known to have been called the Ślokavārttika.[1] In the Mackenzie Mss. in the Madras Govt. Oriental Mss. Library (Local Records vol. 45, pp. 34-35) we have a Sanskrit inscription in Grantha characters on the four gates of a Kākatīya temple; the verses on the northern and eastern gates reveal to us a poet named Narasiṁha; more interesting is the information found here that this Narasiṁha wrote a historical work called the Kākatīyacarita which he finished in a single day, that he wrote some works of philosophy and that he was also the author of specimens of all the ten kinds of drama. The Ṛgveda is also mentioned but what he did with it is not clear. At the end of the verse on the eastern side, it is incised that the verse on Narasiṁha as the author of ten kinds of dramas is taken from the prose work Malayavatī. Of this prose composition too the author is, in all likelihood, the same prolific Narasiṁha.

But an examination and comparison of the Pratāparudrīya quotations in the Sūktiratnahāra with Baddena's Nītiśāstramuktāvalī does not bear out the belief. Dr. M. Rama Rao takes the Nītisāra as the work of the earlier Kākatīya King Rudradeva, 1158-96 A.D. (see his 'The Kākatīyas of Warangal', p. 52), which seems to be wrong.

Who can this Narasiṁha be and under which Kākatīya King did he flourish? I think he may be identical with Agastya's nephew already mentioned, the author of the play Kādambarī Kalyāṇa. For in the

1. See my account of Literature in the Nanda-Maurya period, Age of the Nandas and Mauryas, p. 328. The information in the Madras Triennial Catalogue R. No. 3912 (a) that this is a gloss on the Kāśikā and the emendation of the post-colophon statement in the ms. to that effect are wrong. Among the colophons within the work, that to V. 4 calls the gloss वृत्तिस्थश्लोकव्याख्यान; the last colophon reads वृत्तिकश्लोकव्याख्यान।

Prologue to that play, Narasiṁha refers to himself in terms akin to those in the above inscription, viz., he is an adept in all the ten kinds of Rūpakas :

अयं दशसु रूपकेष्वपि निरूढिमाढौकितुं
परं प्रभवतीति नो मनसि मैव भूदद्भुतम् ॥ 7 ॥

This means that the Kākatīya king under whom he wrote is Pratāparudra.

A more important figure among the scholars of Pratāparudra's court was Guṇḍaya Bhaṭṭa, already referred to briefly, who was in charge of the office of looking after the Brahmans, the Brāhmaṇādhikārin. We came to know of this Guṇḍaya for the first time now from a ms. of his commentary on the Advaita classic Khaṇḍana Khaṇḍa Khādya of Śrīharṣa, preserved in the Travancore University Mss. Library.[1] According to the third and fourth introductory verse at the opening of this work, Guṇḍaya who was the Brāhmaṇādhikārin under Pratāparudra was a master of Veda, Śāstra and Smṛti and son of Rājamahendra Somayājin who was a supreme Vedāntin.

Besides these writers we know from the Pānugal inscription of Pratāparudra (A.D. 1290) of poet Ananta, grandson of Govinda-bhaṭṭa, who composed that inscription;[2] also, according to the Veṅkaṭagudi inscription, the Śaiva religious head Aghoraśivācārya, of the shrine of Sahasraliṅga-Gaṇapati, received patronage under Pratāparudɹa.[1]

We have noticed quite a considerable output of Sanskrit literature under the last great Kākatīya. So far as his predecessor, his grandmother Rudrāmbā, 1260-1296, is concerned, we have no materials available about the Sanskrit writers of her time. The Indaluri (Kolani) family of Brahman chiefs who were ministers and commanders of the Kākatīyas was also a family of authors; it was represented at this time by Ganna, father of the author of the Rājarudrīya already noticed. From epigraphy we can say that the tradition of munificent royal patronage of Sanskrit scholars is reflected in her time in the Koṭagiri plates dated A.D. 1273 in which fifteen donees, all Brahman Sanskrit scholars, three of whom are poets, one a Bhāgavata, and one a poet from Tamil country (Draviḍa Umjapirā Kavigāru), are met with.[2]

To come back to the reign of Gaṇapati, Rudrāmbā's father, the only outstanding Sanskrit writer of his time so far known is our author Jāyasenāpati. While mss. reveal no other author, inscriptions help us to add a little more to our knowledge of Sanskrit learning and literature under Gaṇapati. The Pakhal inscription of Gaṇapati dated 1245 A.D.[3] mentions its composer as Kavi-cakravarttin, of a family devoted for generations to the Kākatīyas (see last Sanskrit verse, 41st, and the closing Telugu passage). Another erudite epigraphical poet of this reign is Iśvarabhaṭṭopādhyāya of the Taraṇikaṇṭi family; he was a master of Yajurveda, grammar and Citrakavitva: in the last class, he indulges, even in inscriptions, in such feats as Niṣkaṇṭhya, Nistālavya, Nirmurdhanya, Nirdantya and Niroṣṭhya, as also varieties of Bhramaka.[4] Iśvara Suri flourished under both Rudradeva and his grandson Gaṇapati and his immediate patron was the general Malyāla Guṇḍa. The Gaṇapavaram Inscription of A.D. 1214 is by the poet Nandi, son of Reci, son of Nandimitra of Bhāradvāja gotra and a great scholar. The Hanumakoṇḍa inscription of Rudradeva[5] dated 1163 A.D. is composed by one Acintendra, son of Rāmeśvara Dīkṣita and pupil of the advaitic sannyāsin, Advayāmṛta.

The richer picture of the religious conditions presented by the Kākatīya inscriptions is again an indirect evidence of the patronage extended to Sanskrit learning and teachers of different religious sects and schools of philosophy. Veda, sacrifices, temples, Advaita, Śaiva schools, observance of Dānas and Vratas set forth in Dharma-nibandhas[1] — all these found in the inscriptions prove the full swing in which the Sanskrit learning was during these times.

Not less relevant to our purpose is the Telugu literary output of this age; for authors like Pālkuriki Somanātha, Tikkana and Māraṇa were themselves great Sanskrit scholars; the Telugu compositions not only bear the impress of the Sanskrit literature but some of them were translations or adaptations of Sanskrit originals. It will hardly be an exaggeration to state that a full appreciation of the condition of Sanskrit learning and literary activity in Sanskrit during this period is not possible without taking into consideration the Telugu writings also.

NĀṬYA SĀSTRA IN ANDHRA

Of the many branches of learning which flourished under the patronage of the Telugu kings, not the least noteworthy is that of Nāṭya Śāstra, embracing the twin arts of music and dance. The great popularity of these arts in the Andhradeśa from early times is seen from the sculptures of Amaravati and Nagarjunakonda, and if the evidence of the plastic art alone would suffice, we find the continuity of the art of dance up to the Vijayanagar times. Confining our attention to dance for the present, we find that Amaravati, besides vouching to us the vogue of the art, reveals the great choreographic possibilities of the group and composite dances called Piṇḍī-bandhas mentioned by Bharata and elaborated by Abhinavagupta; the verbal descriptions in Sanskrit texts become concrete in the beautiful depictions in stone, such as in the Amaravati scene in which we see a group-dance of four danseuses, (drawing 16, plate xiii, Amaravati Sculptures in the Madras Museum, Govt. Museum, Madras), which is remarkable for its composition, balance and grace. In the Amaravati sculptures preserved in the British Museum also, we have a dance-scene with a danseuse accompanied by two ladies playing on the flute and the vīṇā (see plate XXVI, Sculptures from Amaravati in the British Museum, 1954). The sculptures of Goli in Guntur District show a lady playing the harp (pl. vi. Fig. I, Madras Museum Bulletin on Buddhist Sculptures from a Stupa near Goli). In Nagarjunakonda, we have not only a similar sculpture of a lady playing the vīṇā (Pl. XLIV (a), (Longhurst, The Buddhist Antiquities of Nagarjunakonda, Memoirs of the Archaeological Survey of India), but there is also the scene of a group-dance by three danseuses[1], which though less beautiful and striking, can be studied along with the group-dance in Amaravati referred to earlier.

The wide vogue of dance in the Kākatīya period is attested by the triple testimony of epigraphy, sculpture and literature. The Pillamaṛṛi inscription of Receruvula Nāmi Reḍḍi[2] records the gift of houses to musicians, drummers and dancers attached to the temples. The Pānugal inscription of Mailāmbā[3] mentions similar endowments for music and dancing. The Dharmasāgar inscription[4] refers to nivartanas of land for musicians[5] and ten dancing girls. As already noticed[6], the Gaṇapati-Jāya inscription of Chebrolu[7] speaks of houses being granted to sixteen dancing girls.

Along with these epigraphs, the sculptures of the temples built by the Kākatīya Kings confirm the continuity of the dance-traditions and their association with the temples. The most noteworthy dance-sculptures of the Kākatīya period are those of the Rāmappa temple a few of the poses from which are reproduced in this book ; from the point of view of the Sanskrit treatise edited here, these dance-sculptures have an additional significance, for they were done in the reign of the same Gaṇapati under whom Jāya wrote his Nṛttaratnāvalī. It has been mentioned or at least assumed by some Telugu writers on the history of dance and music in Andhra that the Kākatīya dance-sculptures illustrate Jāya's work, but this cannot be demonstrated ; the specimens we have are too meagre and disclose no effort, comparable to the one at Chidambaram or Tanjore, at any systematic illustration ; and though approximations can be seen, exact identifications of the poses in these carvings in terms of the classic Karaṇas cannot be definitely made. In the Annual Report of the Arch. Dept. of H. E. H. Nizam's Dominions, 1915–16 (1917), we have in plate vii pillars and doorways of the Great Temple of Pālampet carved with dancing figures ; pl. ix (a) here shows the interior of the Temple at the eastern end of the Rāmappa lake Bund, Pālampet (Warangal), with dancing figures in different poses accompanied by lady-drummers ; fig. (b) shows similar dancing figures with lady-drummers on doorways from the western end. The Report for 1934–35 (1938) pl. vi (a) shows a door-lintel from Warangal Fort carrying similar dance-carvings. The Svayambhuliṅgeśvara temple in the Warangal fort has miniature representations of Śiva's dance.[1]

On the literary side we have both Sanskrit and Telugu works bearing witness to the extensive practice of dance in this age. On the Sanskrit side, we have our Nṛttaratnāvali itself. On the side of Telugu works, we have not merely side-lights thrown on the state of this art during this period, but more substantial information and material pertaining to the art. For example in the Paṇḍitārādhya Caritra[2] already referred to, we have in the Parvata-prakaraṇa not only a resume of the technical terms of dance, but a description of the folk-dances which is particularly valuable from the point of view of the folk-dances described in the Nṛttaratnāvali. This work confirms the dual association of dance and temple, and of dance and Śaivism, for the work describes these dances as part of the Mahā-śivarātri festival at the Śrīśailam shrine. The more popular Deśī-dances described in this work are : Veḍayāṭa which is Vikaṭa-nartana, Cindu dealt with by Jāya too, Kōḍaṅgiyaṭa which is clowns' dance and can be compared with the Bhāṇḍika-nartana in Jāya, Peraṇi found in Jāya, plays depicting the acts of the Pṛamatha-gaṇas (bahu-nāṭakamulu), Bahurūpa which is described by Jāya also, Veḍḍaṅga[3] which is full of karaṇas and varied gatis but is obscure, imitation of celestial and semi-celestial damsels, Bird-dance, dance on top of Bamboos (Vaṁśa-nartana by Ḍombas), Shadow-plays showing Bhārata and other stories, Puppet-shows and Fancy-dress (Pagaṭi [Pahal in Tamil] vēṣa).

3. Veḍḍaṅga itself is not a Telugu word.

As Somanātha's narrative is full of Nāṭya-information, it may be usefully digested here. It is noteworthy that Peraṇi is qualified here as Pañcāṁsi which is to be corrected as Pañca-aṁśi, having five parts, as indeed Peraṇi has been described in texts to be; its five aṁsas or aṅgas are, as Jāya sets them forth, Nṛtta, Kaivāra (i. e., Kavicāra), Gharghara, Vikaṭa and Gīta. Somanātha then describes the other dances going on in front of the shrine. He starts first with the ornaments and make-up of the dancers. The use of shorts it mentioned, which may be noted. Then there was music and dance as soon as the dancers arrived inside; this is pūrva-raṅga, within the curtain, at the end of which the dancers issued out of the curtain (Javanikā). The play of the various aṅgas, pratyaṅgas and upāṅgas like eyes and brows of the dancers is then generally described which is followed by a description of instrumental music, with a list of Dēśī terms of gamakas and modes of instrumentation. After a brief reference to foot-work, Pāda-ghaṭṭana and Udghaṭana and Karaṇa of the Utpluti variety, the author gives a purely poetic description of the full fervour in which the dancers of different kinds danced about. It is interesting to note here the poet mentioning those that walked on bamboo-stilts, on one leg, on the knees, those that moved forward in a seated pose and on their breasts and others who wheeled around. Special attention may be drawn to Somanātha describing some as wheeling round like tops, because the circular piroutte-movements called Bhramarīs are now scarce if not absent from our dances here, though they are seen in the Kathak in the North and the Kandyan. Equally noteworthy is Somanātha's description of dancers who strut or step or jump or utter sounds or act otherwise like different birds and animals, peacock, bee, parrot, fish, swan, deer, cuckoo, monkey, bull, elephant, tiger and serpent.

With all these the assemblage of manifold types of dancers were dancing and enacting plays on different stories. Somanātha has then a long musical excursus the material in which I have set forth elsewhere[1].

The aṅgas of Dēśī-lāsya are set forth in different works and Jāya gives and defines forty-six of them in Chapter VI of his work. Somanātha gives in this description a large number of these; while it is difficult to make out some of these, some cannot be traced in Jāya,

[1] See my article "Music in Pālkuriki Somanātha's works", Journal of the Madras Music Academy, Vol. XIV, pp. 140–44

Śārṅgadeva, Pārśvadeva or Vemabhūpāla ; and for that very reason, I think, Somanātha's description has a value of its own in the study of the history of dance in those times.

After enumerating the Dēśī-lāsyāṅgas, Somanātha gives a resume of the actions of different limbs: 4 of the face, 7 of the brows, 26 of the eyes, 6 of the nostrils, 10 of the ear, 9 of the neck, 3 of the breast, 5 of the feet, 5 of the thighs; then 20 Aṅgahāras, 22 Tānakas, i. e., Sthānakas, 34 Dṛṣṭis, 64 Hastas, 32 Cārīs, 7 Bhramarīs, 108 Karaṇas, 100 Alaṅkāras, 13 actions of the head, and 32 Daṇḍanas. This list does not accord fully with that in any single text, some numbers are peculiar, the two sets of eyes are perplexing and the 100 Alaṅkāras and 32 Daṇḍanas obscure.

Lastly Somanātha has a very interesting list of gatis according to different birds and animals, swan, elephant, bull, monkey, goat, peacock and serpent.

Somanātha shows that we have to collect and collate more material from literary sources for producing an adequate account of the wealth and variations of the art and its traditions.

The relevant portions of this long description of dances is reproduced here in Devanagari script for the benefit of the non-Telugu scholars interested in Nāṭya.

The Basavapurāṇa[2], also by the same author, gives us some descriptions of dance, which though less extensive and also discontinuous, has some important points: while describing Basava's marriage Somanātha refers to Kolāṭṭa, i e., Daṇḍa-rāsaka, Pātra of which we hear for the first time here, Goṇḍalī and Peraṇī[3]. A little later are mentioned Ānanda-gītas, Śaṅkara-gitas and what is most relevant to us here, Jati-gītas[4]. On the occasion of Basava's visit to Kalyān, Peraṇī is mentioned and said to be done according to the tradition of the dance-masters of Saurāṣṭra, which lights up the history and early environment of the Śaivite Peraṇī. The purvaraṅga music, the removal of the curtain, Deśī Lāsyāṅgas, Mukharasa, Sauṣṭhava, Lali, Bhāva, Dhukaḷi[1], Jhaṅkaḷi, Ṭhēva, Vibhrama, and Rekhā. The Jati-gītas arè again referred to on p. 78. A further description here (p. 90) teems with Deśī-music terms.

Even more significant is the fact known from Krīḍābhirāma that there was a courtezan-dancer of high repute, Mācaladevī by name, who was a friend of Pratāparudra, and her life was dramatised and enacted![2]

Among the Reḍḍis of Kondavidu, we have more than one royal author who has given us a treatise on dance. First comes, of course, King Kumāragiri (C. 1386—C. 1402 A. D.) who wrote a valuable Nāṭya Śāstra work called Vasantarājīya after his own alias Vasantarāja; no manuscript of this work has so far come to light, but citations from the Vasantarājīya Naṭya Śāstra are made by other writers, Kumāragiri's own minister and brother-in-law Kāṭaya Vema, the commentator of Kālidāsa's plays, Nāḍeṇḍla Gopa in his commentary on the Prabodhacandrodaya, Mallināṭha on Māgha and his son Kumārasvāmin on the Pratāparudrīya[3]. Kumāragiri's successor Peda Komaṭi Vema or Vema Bhupāla or Vīranārāyaṇa wrote the Saṅgīta Cūḍāmaṇi which has already been noticed.[4]

We may also notice here some references to dances in the Kāśikhaṇḍa of Śrīnāṭha the Telugu poet of this time. Śrīnāṭha speaks of a dancing girl of Banaras known as Karpuratilakā who danced in front of Ratneśa. While describing the dance he speaks of Kuṇḍalī-nṛtta, and the different views on dance promulgated by Kohala and other Ācāryas; the distinction into Deśi and Mārga, the Cārī, Karaṇa, Aṅgahāra, Recaka, Bhramarikā, and the tradition of Śiva and Pārvatī being the promulgators of Tāṇḍava and Lāsya. (Canto VI, p. 273, verse 169, Vavilla edn., 1916).

1. Andhra Patrika Edition p. 62. All these Deśī-lāsyāṅgas are found in Jāya, except Dhūkali which is found in Pārśvadeva who gives it as Tūkali.
2. It is interesting to note in this connection of a later Mācaladevī whose name occurs in two epigraphs, and of whom perhaps we have a drawing in one of them. On a pillar in front of the central shrine in the Malleśvara temple at Bezwada, there is an epigraph in which one Rāmaya makes a gift of land to God Pāpavināśa; underneath the text is etched the figures of a lady dancer and a drummer who accompanies her; the captions under the figures call the two Mācaladevī and Pinakūna battudu. On the second face of the same pillar, there is another epigraph in which Mācaladevī herself gifts lands to those belonging to her community (Veśyās?). See SII. IV. p. 253, Nos. 772, 773 of A. D. 1437 and 319 A of 1892. (Sri M. S. Sarma drew my attention to this).

The most distinguished among the Recarla Kings was Simha-bhupāla, entitled Sarvajña, who gave us not only the Rasārṇava Sudhākara on Rasa and dance, but the Saṅgīta Sudhākara[1], a commentary on the Saṅgita Ratnākara which deals with dance in the last chapter.

This was also the period when the dance-drama called Yakṣa-gāna arose.

Coming to the Rāyas of Vijayanagar, the Patron-saint of the founders, Vidyāraṇya, is said to have written a Saṅgītasāra which is quoted in Tanjore in the Saṅgītasudhā ascribed to King Raghunātha Naik. For glimpses into dance during the period of Devarāya II, we may cite the following evidences.

Abdu-r Razzak, the Arab visitor, describes the magnificent celebration of the Mahānavamī day during Dasarah at the palace in Vijayanagar. In this description, which refers to the time of Devarāya II, we have the foreign visitor's testimony to the wonderful display of dance that took place on that festive occasion. Abdu-r Razzak says: "Between this place and pavilions there was an open space beautifully laid out, in which singers and story-tellers exercised their respective arts. The singers were for the most part young girls, with cheeks like the moon, and faces more blooming than the spring and adorned with beautiful garments, and displaying figures which ravished the heart like fresh roses. They were seated behind a beautiful curtain, opposite the King. On a sudden the curtain was removed on both sides, and the girls began to move their feet with such grace that wisdom lost its senses, and the soul was intoxicated with delight."[2] In A. D. 1433-34, a Tamil Devadāsī, Aramvalatta Nācciyār, attached to the Agnīśvara temple at Māḍam sought an interview with King Devarāya II and got from him a grant on behalf of a temple[3].

Gopendra Tippa who was brother of Sāluva Tirumalarāya and a Governor under Devarāya II wrote a separate treatise on Tālas, the Tāladīpikā (Madras Ms. R. 770; Tanjore 10828-9); from one of the introductory verses of his gloss on Vāmana's Kāvyā-laṅkārasūtras and Vṛtti[4], we learn that he wrote a Tāla-prabandha on Śiva and what is more relevant to us now, some work relating to dance:

The best-known literary production of the Vijayanagar times is the commentary on the Saṅgīta Ratnākara called Kalānidhi by Catura Kallinātha, who wrote under Immaḍi Mallikārjunarāya (A. D. 1448–65). Kallinātha's commentary is more valuable than Siṅgabhupāla's, and the proficiency of Kallinātha in dance is clearly seen in his commentary on the last chapter of the Ratnākara. Under Kṛṣṇadevarāya (A. D. 1509–30), Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa, the dance-teacher[1] of the ladies of the court, wrote the Saṅgītasūryodaya[2] which has a chapter on dance;[3] he uses Śārṅgadeva profusely and quotes also Kohala. Lolla Lakṣmīdhara who was patronised by Vīrarudra Gajapati of Orissa and Kṛṣṇadevarāya of Vijayanagar, says in his long informing colophon at the end of his Saundaryalaharīvyākhyā that his fifth ancestor Viriñcimiśra wrote a dance-treatise called Bharatārṇavapota.[4]

Much more than literature, the sculptures of Hampi and the accounts of the court and life in the capital by the foreign travellers, Barbosa, Paes and others bear witness to the extent to which this art was patronised in this period. These foreign travellers refer to the high affluence of the dancing girls and their association with higher circles and the court. Lady members of the royal household also learnt this art. The most noteworthy part of the account of Paes is his description of the Dance-hall where the dancing-girls learnt and displayed their art. "This is a long hall and not very wide, all of stone sculptures on pillars which are at a distance of quite an arm's length from the wall. The designs of these panels show the position at the ends of dances in such a way that on each panel there is a dancer in the proper position at the end of a dance; this is to teach the women, so that if they forgot the position in which they have to remain when the dance is done, they may look at one of the panels where is the end of the dance. By that they keep in mind what they have to do. At the end of this house on the other hand is a painted recess where the women cling on with their hands in order later to stretch and loosen their bodies and legs; there they teach them to make the whole body supple, in order to make their dancing more graceful. At the other end, on the right, is the place where the King places himself to watch them dancing; all the floors and walls where he sits are covered with gold and in the middle of the wall is the golden image of a woman of the size of a girl of twelve years, with her arms in the position which she occupies in the end of a dance." Had this hall been spared, we could have had one more effective aid for the reconstruction today of our dance-tradition; with Tanjore and Chidambaram, Vijayanagar would have given us the third stone-Bhāṣya on Bharata. All that we now see among the ruins is the throne platform along the sides of which run dance-friezes. Belonging to the same period are reported similar dance-friezes in the Tāḍpatri temple.

The manuscript lacks the Rāga section. The manuscript Matangabharata in the Sarasvati Mahal Library, Tanjore, (no. 10667, new catalogue), is really a portion of Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa's Saṅgīta Sūryodaya. Lakṣmīnārāyaṇa, or Lakṣmaṇa as he calls himself, gives 109 Karaṇas, adding a Kṛṣṇāvataraṇa after the Gaṅgāvataraṇa.

Nāḍendla Gopa, one of Kṛṣṇadevarāya's officers, wrote a commentary on the allegorical play Prabodhacandrodaya; among the Nāṭya-authorities quoted here is Śṛṅgaṇācārya whose name occurs twice.[1] This Śṛṅgaṇācārya may be Siṅgaṇa Bhaṭṭa of whom we hear in the times of Komaṭi Vema Reḍḍi and who is said to have written a Telugu gloss on the Saṅgītaratnākara.[2]

Catura Dāmodara also appears to be an Andhra writer and his Saṅgīta Darpaṇa[3] deals in its chapter on Prabandhas, compositions, those pertaining to dance also and devotes the last chapter, the sixth, to dance; in this dance chapter, South Indian dance-forms and dance-compositions are dealt with and I made some use of it for the edition of the Nṛttaratnāvalī.

More important than the above-mentioned work is the Saṅgīta Muktāvalī[4] of Devaṇa or Devendra; this is another South Indian dance treatise coming, most probably from Andhra. Both in the Abhinaya and the dance sections, I think, Devaṇa's work which I have frequently consulted[5], forms a valuable production.

Telugu contribution to South Indian music and dance got a fresh lease and put on a new growth and glory in Tanjore where the Nayak rulers, principally the second and the third, Raghunātha and Vijayarāghava, extended munificent patronage to these two arts. But as time went on, in the field of music as well as dance, well-written Sanskrit treatises gave place to summaries, handbooks and fragmentary compilations, put together by teachers who were certainly well established in tradition and in touch with the practical side of the art, but were not distinguished scholars of the time to be able to write important works. We may however mention three texts of this late period: Bharatasarvārthasaṅgraha of Muḍumba Narasiṁhācārya, (R. No. 2435—Madras Government Oriental Manuscripts Library), Nāṭya Cūḍāmaṇi of Somaṇārya (R. 366-e, Ibid.)[1], and Arjunādimatasāra of Śuddhasattva Veṅkaṭācārya (R. 3070, Ibid.)[2]. There is hardly a standard music and dance text, fragments of which with Telugu gloss are not found in manuscripts. In fact, Telugu dominated the arts of music and dance, and a knowledge of Telugu was till very recently part of a Karnatak musician's general equipment.

A passing reference was already made to the rise of the Telugu Yakṣagāna. Corresponding to this Yakṣagāna done by a particular class of people, the learned Brahmans of Andhra developed a tradition of dance-drama as part of their Bhāgavata-dharma which called upon devotees to keep up the practice of singing and dancing of themes glorifying the Lord. This tradition, which really goes as far back as Jayadeva's Gītagovinda, was cultivated by Telugu Brahman devotees at the village Kūcipūḍi. The earliest reference to the Bhāgavatas of Kūcipūḍi and their plays is in the Mācupalli Kaifiyat (Local Records 56, pp. 66 ff.) of the time of the Vijayanagar King Vīranarasiṁha, c. 1502 A. D. The Telugu Bhāgavata dance-drama tradition of some villages near Tanjore[3], that became prominent later, was an offshoot of the Kūcipūḍi tradition. Equally important in the history of dance in South India and among the Telugu contributions to it is the corpus of Telugu Padas or songs intended for Abhinaya, which the great Telugu composer Kṣetrajña composed. The Pada is a song portraying a mood of love and featuring a specific type or variety of the lover and the beloved, Nāyaka and Nāyikā, according to the classifications of these set forth in works like the Rasamañjarī. Kṣetrajña's Padas, which might be assumed to have been inspired also by love-muktakas in Sanskrit, as in the Amaruśataka, are masterly creations noteworthy for their melodic beauty[1], Telugu diction and emotional richness which afford scope for improvisation of Abhinaya. In fact, like the Megha-dūta and the Gītagovinda, the Kṣetrajña-padas gave rise to a train of imitators, pada-composers who emulated Kṣetrajña, many of them with conspicuous success.[2] Kṣetrajña was also one of those who established a unity in the artistic field of Karnatak music and dance, by traversing the whole of South India, singing of the deities in the different shrines and stopping at the famous courts of the day, of Abdulla Qutb Shah of Golconda in the North, of Raghunātha Naik and Vijayarāghava Naik of Tanjore in the middle and Tirumala Naik of Madurai in the South (A. D. 17th century)[3]. The wealth of dance-contribution in Telugu in the subsequent period, leading up to our own times, when this art was attaining a shape and style at Tanjore which forms its high-water-mark still, can be adequately described only on another occasion and in a different context.

THE NṚTTARATNĀVALĪ AND ITS CONTENTS

The nature of the present work Nṛttaratnāvalī and its place among works of its class produced in the part of the country to which it belongs have already been indicated. These can be more fully appreciated through a detailed notice of the contents of the work and an examination of the noteworthy points in its treatment of the subject. A comparative study of the text with reference to the other texts will help the proper evaluation of the work and its importance in the field of Nāṭya Śāstra.

The work is in eight chapters: Chapter One opens with the definition of Nāṭya and its four constituents, the four Abhinayas and the different aspects of dance, Nṛtya and Nṛtta, Mārga and Deśī and Tāṇḍava and Lāsya. Chapter Two takes up the chief of the four Abhinayas from the point of view of dance proper, the Āṅgika, and sets forth its several classes as related to the different limbs of the body and parts of the face, called Aṅgas, Pratyaṅgas and Upāṅgas ; the varieties of each of these are enumerated and defined. The gestures of the hands, Hastābhinaya, single and double, Saṁyuta and Asaṁyuta, are included here. The above, Aṅgas, Pratyaṅgas and Upāṅgas, exhaust the parts of the body from the head to the feet and the fingers of the feet. Chapter Three takes up first the movements of the legs called Cāris, the poses of the legs called Sthānas which include different sitting and reclining postures ; these are dealt with separately as applying to men and women. Then follows the description of sequences of Cārīs called Maṇḍalas. Chapter Four sets forth the hundred and eight poses of the feet and hands called Karaṇas, the Aṅgahāras which are composed of two or more Karaṇas, and the movements of feet, hand etc. called Recakas which are involved in these Karaṇas.

What has so far been dealt with is material that has come down from Bharata and is consequently designated as Mārga. In the post-Bharata times many other poses and movements came into vogue; these also gained recognition and were codified as Deśī-varieties. Chapter Five devotes itself to these Deśī-varieties of Sthānas, Karaṇas and Bhramaras (wheeling movements). Continuing the same subject, Chapter Six describes the Deśī-varieties of floor-contacts (Pādas), then Deśī-Cāris and Deśī-Lāsyāṅgas in which are included finer and technical points and elements of grace of the dance. The chapter ends with the subject of Gatis or varieties of gait. Chapter Seven devotes itself to general topics: times suitable for beginning lessons in dance, the Stage, preliminaries like worshipping Gaṇeśa, method of practising or taking exercises, students suitable for learning the art, dance-dress, certain hand-poses used in the practice of the exercises, essential points to be borne in mind such as the importance of bhāva or the expression of the feeling and the need for the eye and mind to follow the motion of the hand, the orchestra for the dance and the details of the music-accompaniment. The above form one section of Chapter Seven. The second part of the same chapter gives a description of several interesting popular dance-forms, Deśī-nṛttas; those described here are: Peraṇi, Prekkhaṇa, Sūḍa-nartana, Rāsaka, Carcarī, Nāṭya-rāsaka, Śivapriya, Cintu, Kanḍuka-nartana, Bhāṇḍika-nṛtta, Ghaṭisani (?), Caraṇa-nṛtta Bahurūpa, Kollāṭa and Goṇḍali. The concluding part of this chapter describes the Theatre and its three types, by size as well as shape, and the qualities of the audience and the person presiding over it.

Chapter Eight, the concluding, is similarly given to some of the remaining general points concerning the presentation of a dance-recital: times suitable for shows, arrival of the chief guest, the King, and welcome to him by the dancers with the waving of light and movements appropriate to it, the King's retinue, the qualities of the leading danseuse, her dress, the orchestra, its seating and tuning, entry of the danseuse, the three curtains and their removal stage by stage and lastly the honouring of the danseuse, the musicians and the poet.

From the above it might be seen that the Nṛttaratnāvalī is devoted solely to dance and that it does not speak of Nāṭya proper or drama, nor of music, an essential part of dance, on which, as it says in V. 106, the author Jāya has written a separate treatise called Gītaratnāvalī. The treatment of the subject of dance is in two sections, the former devoted to the forms and technique handed down from Bharata and called Mārga, and the latter to forms which developed later and in the different regions and called Deśī. The chapters of the book dealing with the latter subject of Deśī-nṛtta form, as will be shown below, a very important part of Jāya's contribution, but the treatment of the former, the Mārga style, in the earlier chapters could not be overlooked merely on the ground of the subject-matter being handed down or drawn from earlier texts. For even in the Mārga-aspect of the art, there were diverse strands and traditions associated with different post-Bharata teachers and in interpreting Bharata himself, there were different schools. The author of our work took note of all these differences in tradition and his treatment of the old Karaṇas etc. is therefore valuable for its comprehension and the glimpses it gives of the richness of the Nāṭya-tradition.

AUTHORITIES CITED BY JĀYA

The basic and foremost authority on whom Jāya bases himself is, of course, Bharata. The first four chapters of the Nṛttaratnāvalī present more or less the material originally set forth by Bharata in his Nāṭya Śāstra. Bharata is cited by name and as Muni and the largest number (about fifty) of references to earlier authorities occuring in the work is to Bharata. There are about fifty places where Jāya refers to the views of other authorities. While these are in general terms as ācāryāḥ, eke, anye, kecit, pare or matāntara, here are numerous other places (about seventy) where Jāya cites specific writers by their names. Next to Bharata comes Kohala who supplemented Bharata's text and Jāya makes but a solitary reference to him. Of authorities of the same character, the only other name mentioned is that of Tumburu who is cited once. In the post-Bharata period, whether it is in music or dance, the most important place is occupied by Mataṅga and his Bṛhaddeśī, which as its name shows patently, incorporated and defined all the Deśī-developments in the post-Bharata period. Jāya mentions Mataṅga four times and his treatise twice. In the interpretation of Bharata's own tradition, Jāya derives utmost help from Abhinavagupta and his commentary on the Nāṭya Śāstra, but what is more interesting to note is that Jāya makes use of two other important exponents of Bharata, Kīrtidhara and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu. Kīrtidhara is cited about thirtythree times and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu about twentythree times. The importance of the citations from these two writers is that their exposition differed from Abhinavagupta's, and barring Abhinavagupta himself, Jāya is the only writer who cites Kīrtidhara so largely; and in the case of Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu also, the same reasons make Jāya's references to his views very valuable. There is a solitary reference to Śaṅkuka, a predecessor of Abhinavagupta in the exposition of the Nāṭya Śāstra. On the new developments and in respect of the nomenclature and definition of terms pertaining to these, the author whom Jāya draws upon, sometimes with the mention of his name and sometimes anonymously, is Someśvara, Cālukya King of Kalyān, author of the Mānasollāsa or Abhilaṣitartha-cintāmaṇi. Between the Saṅgītasamayasāra of Pārśvadeva and the Nṛttaratnāvalī, there are several close parallels, and similarly between the Saṅgītaratnākara of Śārṅgadeva and the Nṛttaratnāvalī; but the inter-relation of these two texts on the one hand and the Nṛtturatnāvalī on the other is to be specially discussed.

BHARATA

In the footnotes on the pages of the Text itself, I have shown the corresponding portions of or actual citations from Bharata's Nāṭya Śāstra. In addition to this, in the Notes at the end, I have given a complete concordance of the texts of Jāya and Bharata. It is not the extent of the material taken from Bharata that is important; most later works on the subject have to take this much and even more; but what is really noteworthy is the understanding of the text of Bharata and its important contexts which the author of the Nṛttaratnāvalī shows in his treatment of the different topics. At the end of Ch. II and his treatment of the Aṅgas, Pratyaṅgas and Upāṅgas, the author describes himself as one who knew the intention or mind of Bharata:

प्रोक्तं जायचमूपेन मुनेराशयवेदिना। II. 346; p. 67.

That this is a well-justified claim can be seen as we go with our further examination Jāya's work and its treatment of the different topics. To cite an example of the imagination and understanding with which Jāya interprets Bharata, we may turn to his treatment of Cārīs in Ch. III and his definition of the first Carī called Samapāda (III. 15), which is a typical illustration of his originality and the brilliant gloss he could provide on Bharata. Bharata's definition of Samapāda is (X. 14, GOS. II. pp. 96-97):

पदैर्निरन्तरकृतैस्तथा समनखैरपि।
समपादा तु सा चारी विज्ञेया स्थानसंश्रया॥

The problem here is how the mere standing in Samapāda pose could be called a Carī which has necessarily to be a movement (caraṇa) and Abhinavagupta, who realises the difficulty, offers his own explanation by taking hold of the epithet स्थानसंश्रया in Bharata's text. As the dancer has anyhow to pass on from Samapāda to a further Sthāna, movement is automatically involved and it could thus be called Cārī:

ननु समपादा कथं वा चारीत्याह—स्थानसंश्रयेति। यदा समपाद एव स्थानान्तरं गच्छति, तदा चरणः (णात्) चारी भवत्येव, योग्यतया तथा व्यपदेशादिति भावः। P. 97, GOS. II.

Śārṅgadeva, who usually just versifies Abhinavagupta, re-states the latter, in clearer words, that Samapāda is called Cārī, just because it holds the potentiality of further movements:

स्थानेन समपादेन समपादा तदोदिता।
प्रचारयोग्यतामात्राच्चारी स्थानेऽप्यसौ मता॥ S.R. VII. 918 (Adyar)

The difficulty had struck Someśvara who, in view of the concise method of treatment he had necessarily to adopt in his Thesaurus, said:

समपादस्थितौ पादौ यदा तिर्यक् प्रसर्पतः।
तदा समनखा(पदा) चारी विज्ञेया नाट्ययोक्तृभिः॥

Thus according to Someśvara, the Cārī in Samapāda consists of a lateral moving of the two feet, set closely in Samapāda. It is Jāya who raises the question clearly and answers in a detailed way:

स्थित्वैव समपादेन भौमीमाकाशिकीमपि।
यतः कुर्यात्ततश्चारी समपादा निगद्यते॥

श्लिष्टपार्ष्णिनखं (यस्मात्) तिष्ठन्त्येकैकशो व्रजेत्।
समं पादद्वयं तस्मात् समपादेति संस्मृता॥

मुनेराशयमज्ञात्वा कैश्चिच्छास्त्रविधायिभिः।
समपादयुगस्थानमात्रेणैषा प्रकीर्तिता॥

यद्येवं करणं न स्याद् भि(न्न समनखाभिधम)।
अस्याश्चलनशीलत्वात् पादैरित्यब्रवीन् मुनिः॥ III. 14-17, pp. 69-70.

Here the explanation offered in the first verse is after that of Abhinavagupta but Jāya's own view is expressed in the next where he says, as Someśvara does, that Samapāda is a Cārī because the close Samapäda-feet are here moved together. In the two further verses he points out that those writers who took Samapāda merely as standing with the feet close together did not understand the Muni (Sage Bharata), for such a conception of Samapāda would obviate the need for the Karaṇa called Samanakha; further the meaning of the word Cārī or movement is negatived. The originality of Jāya is seen in his underlining the words पदैर्निरन्तरकृतैस्तथा समनखैरपि, forming the whole first line of Bharata's definition of Samapāda and finding Bharata's real notion (āśaya) of this Cārī in these words; for the plural pādas could be understood only by taking them as dynamic and not static; the adjective 'nirantara-kṛtaiḥ' gives further support to Jāya's interpretation. Of Jāya's followers, it may be pointed out in passing, Kumbhakarṇa misses this, but Vemabhūpāla reproduces this completely, making Jāya's explanation even clearer.

Another context where Jāya offers an explanation of Bharata which is at once intelligent and simpler than the one offered by Śārṅgadeva is in respect of the total number of Hastas (pp. 33-34, śls. 86-96). These Hastas, single, double and those of Nṛtta, are expressly mentioned by Bharata as 64 but they actually come to 66 and, according to Śārṅgadeva's counting, even 67. Here again Jāya takes hold of the word 'Nāmataḥ' in Bharata's text and explains the apparent discrepancy as I have shown in detail in the Notes. Equally intelligent is the explanation given by Jāya (p. 34, śls. 94–6) for the use by Bharata of Singular Number (eka-vacana) in respect of the Samyuta-hastas like Añjali and Dual Number (dvi-vacana) in the case of Nṛtta-hastas, while in fact, in both these cases dual would be proper. Elucidating Bharata's intention here, Jāya says appropriately that in the former case, to denote an idea, the Double or the two Samyuta Hastas are always and necessarily to be used together and hence a pair of Samyuta-hastas is in effect one; this the Sage emphasises by using Singular for them. On the other hand, in Nṛtta-hastas mentioned in Pairs, use and movement occur severally too for one of the Hastas in the pair.

On the execution of the Aṅgahāras, Jāya lays down some general principles at the outset while describing the first Aṅgahāra, Sthira-hasta (pp. 140-1, śls. 265-7), principles which Abhinavagupta deduces from Bharata's laconic lines and their implications. One of these general principles is, as I have explained in the Notes here, that in all Aṅgahāras, the Karaṇas should be done by the dancer facing the different quarters, but towards the end, the last two Karaṇas should be done facing the audience. Jāya reproduces this from Abhinava-gupta's comments on Parivṛtta-recita but it is to be noted that Jāya makes all this clearer by underlining the word 'iha' in Bharata's text; इत्यत्रत्येहशब्देनामुमर्थं पर्यभाषत।

Bharata sometimes uses terms in a general way and the commentator has to clarify or specify what variety of hand or movement is exactly involved. In giving this specification, Jāya shows the care and imagination bestowed by him in understanding Bharata's text. No doubt he receives in many of these cases the help of Abhinava-gupta, e.g. p. 105, Bharata's Pralambita-hastas interpreted as Latā and not Dola; p. 136, criticism of Śaṅkuka's interpretation of Ardhanikuṭṭaka; interpretation of 'punaḥ' in Bharata under Ākṣipta-aṅgahāra, p. 144. But a proper and cogent exposition of such implications requires skill on the part of Jāya too and we can see this particularly in the section on Aṅgahāras in III. 255ff. Bharata's description of the Aṅgahāras are not only brief but often fraught with difficulty of understanding as he mentions part of a Karaṇa-name or that part of a Karaṇa-name meaning a movement or a pose of leg or hand which is common to more than one Karaṇa. This means that the proper Karaṇas of which an Aṅgahāra is composed are to be intelligently deduced. Jāya says:

लक्षणेष्वङ्गहाराणां भरतेन समासतः।
एकदेशग्रहेणोक्तः समग्रं करणं क्वचित्।
आलोच्य तानहं व्यक्तं कथयाम्यनुपूर्वशः॥ III. 260-1

In fact more than in the case of the Karaṇas, it is in that of the Aṅgahāras that Bharata's text calls for sustained and correlated exercise of the commentator's mind. Here again Jāya no doubt seeks Abhinavagupta's help but gives us in his treatment more explicit and clear descriptions of these Aṅgahāras, stating in the course of his description those words in Bharata on the basis of which the deductions of particular Karaṇas etc. are made. E.g. pp. 147-8. Ākṣiptarecita; p. 149, Recita. This could be appreciated fully when each Aṅgahāra is examined in detail. On the nature and number of Recitas again, Jāya shows his understanding of Bharata's text and his skill in interpreting it. Pp. 156-7, śls. 372-77.

In most cases, Jāya tries to draw out the full meaning of Bharata's words or explain the spirit of Bharata, rather than the letter, a method of treatment which obviates too many additions to or alterations in what Bharata has given. E.g. the naming of the Nṛtta-hasta as Muṣṭikasvastika, though this would comprehend also the Hastas Śikhara, Kapota and Kaṭakāmukha (II. 273-4); in Kīrtidhara's version this would involve Muṣṭi and Kaṭakāmukha and take the name Khaḍgavartanikā (II. 275).

A similar search, on the part of Jāya, for the real or full meaning, express or implied, of Bharata's text is responsible for Jāya's explaining, in some places, as needless the additional varieties added by some later writers, as they could be brought under one or the other of the varieties set forth by Bharata. Exampies of this approach to Bharata could be seen under the varieties of Hastapracāras (p. 51, śl. 215), the six additional Bāhus mentioned by others (p. 52, śls. 223-6), the inclusion of Pṛṣṭha or Back and its varieties dealt with by others under those of Uras and Pārśva (chest and sides, p. 60, śl. 299).

There are rare cases where out of fidelity to Bharata's treatment, Jāya, like Abhinavagupta, rejects additional varieties proposed by post-Bharata writers. E.g. the two Lāsyāṅgas added to Bharata's ten (II. 72).

But the normal attitude of Jāya is liberal and under a majority of topics he takes into account the post-Bharata additions. In some cases, Jāya introduces these additions through such words in Bharata as 'athāpi ca' thereby seeking Bharata's implied sanction of possible additional varieties ; e.g. the three Sthānas of women (III. 118). But in most cases, he introduces the additions straight ; e.g. the eleven additional heads (Śiro-bhedas II. 19); the four additional Oṣṭhas (11. 43-45) ; the divergent traditions, particularly that of Kīrtidhara on Nṛtta-hastas (II. 235-282) ; and the two additional Nṛtta-hastas proposed by some (II. 283-6). In fact, from the sixth chapter onwards, Jāya's work deals only with post-Bharata Deśī-developments and it is only towards the end of ch. VIII (śls. 212ff.) that there is again an occasion for Jāya to come to a topic dealt with by Bharata, namely the Theatre. Bharata is not expressly mentioned here but Jāya bases his text on N.Ś. II, though he has his own views on some of the points relating to the Theatre. A concordance of corresponding passages in Jāya and Bharata on this topic has been given in the Notes at the end of this edition and in the footnotes on pp. 237-8.

Jāya's citations from Bharata or his utilisation of Bharata's text has an importance of its own from the point of view of textual criticism of the Nāṭya Śāstra, variant readings of particular words, additional verses in some recensions of Bharata etc. Under the Recakas (p. 155), Jāya reproduces ten lines (śls. 367-371) mentioning expressly that these are found in some recensions of the Nāṭya Śāstra. Attention is invited to the footnotes to Jāya's text in which, wherever noteworthy, I have pointed out the differnces in readings in Bharata's text as used by Jāya. See e.g., p. 39 fn. 20 ; p 44, śl. 171, where 'Kṣaṇe' among uses of the Tāmracūḍa-hasta given by Jāya is found in an adhika-pāṭha verse in the N.Ś. p. 85 fn. ; p. 88 fn. and p. 98 fn. Sometimes these readings in Jāya are indeed superior to these in the printed editions of the Nāṭya Śāstra or the variants recorded in them.

KOHALA

In the history of Nāṭya in the post-Bharata times, Kohala occupies a place as important as, if not more than, that of Mataṅga. In Bharata's text itself Kohala's name occurs first in the list of hundred Bharata-putras enumerated in the first chapter. In the concluding chapter again, Kohala is mentioned, along with some others, as carrying on Bharata's work on earth and it is added that whatever has not been set forth by Bharata, will be dealt with by Kohala in the Uttaratantra :

शेषमुत्तरतन्त्रेण कोहलः कथयिष्यति ।

From the citations in the Abhi. Bhā. we gather that the codification of the Uparūpakas and the more elaborate treatment of music in drama and several other subjects which became part and parcel of the later Nāṭya-works were the work of Kohala. I have drawn attention to references to Kohala's contribution in my 'Some Names in Early Sangita Literature[1]' ; and here I shall discuss Kohala only in relation to Jāya's text.

As has been explained elsewhere in this Introduction, an important aspect of Jāya's work is the place it gives to post-Bharata developments. Naturally we expect that Jāya has drawn considerably on Kohala, but we cannot say this definitely as on one side we do not have Kohala's work and, on the other, Jāya makes only one specific reference to Kohala by name. In the beginning, Jāya says that wherever Bharata has said that further varieties or ideas are to be taken from the world, Bharata's successors who developed his śāstra further have supplemented Bharata's enumerations and definitions (p. 17, śls. 18-19). In this connection, Jāya speaks of Bharata's successors as the authors of the Anu-tantras, the supplementary treatises :

इत्युक्तं मुनिना यत्तदनुतन्त्रविधायिभिः ।
कल्पिताः कतिचिद्भेदाः ॥

The expression Anu-tantra, it may be seen, is close to Uttara-tantra mentioned in Bharata and associated with the name of Kohala. Besides this general reference, the only other place where Jāya expressly mentions Kohala is in chapter IV, in the description of the Karaṇa Nikuṭṭaka, where he quotes Kohala's elucidation of the action called nikuṭṭana (p. 108, śl. 51) :

अलपद्मकनीयस्याः पतनोत्पतनात्मकम् ।
निकुट्टकमिह ज्ञेयं स्कन्धे कोहलसम्मतम् ॥

1. Journal of the Music Academy, Madras, Vol. III. p. 17.

This could however not warrant us in taking Jāya as having had direct access to Kohala's original text, for the citation here on Nikuṭṭaka is not first-hand. Jāya reproduces this from Abhi. Bhā. (GOS. I. p. 103):

निकुट्टिताविति। "उन्नमनं विनमनं स्यादङ्गस्य निकुट्टनम्" इति कोहलः। तेन हस्तस्यालपल्लवस्य etc.

It would therefore appear that Jāya did not have Kohala's work before him while writing the Nṛttaratnāvalī.

TUMBURU

In the case of this old writer, as in that of Kohala, Jāya makes a solitary reference, and that too not original, but reproduced wholly from the corresponding context in the Abhi. Bhā. See GOS. I. p. 165, on Recakas.

The point on which Tumburu is quoted is made more clear by Jāya. There are several Recakas other than what have been actually mentioned or described, as these are involved in the execution of the different Aṅgahāras. The existence of these additional Recakas, Abhinavagupta, and following him, Jāya say is sanctioned, in an implied way, by Bharata's words themselves; and this is made clear also by Tumburu when he says—अङ्गहारादिमध्यान्तकरणै रेचकान् विदुः। Tumburu is mentioned here by Jāya as one of the Bharata-putras who developed the Śastra following in the footsteps of their master पुत्रेण च मुनेरेतत् प्रोक्तं तुम्बुरुणा तथा। But Tumburu's name is not in the list of Bharata-putras in the opening chapter, nor among the few more important among these mentioned in the last chapter of the Nāṭya Śāstra.

On Tumburu and his work and other references to them, my paper 'Some more Names in Early Saṅgīta Literature'[1] may be seen.

MATAṄGA

After Bharata, Mataṅga appears to have been the first writer to have dealt at length with Deśī music and dance What Bharata has said of the Cārīs, Karaṇas, Aṅgahāras and Recakas belonging to them is called Mārga. Many of the forms which developed in times subsequent to Bharaṭa, such as the Uparūpakas in the field of drama, are known from references to have been codified and dealt with by Kōhala about whom we have spoken above. Some of the citations in Kohala's name make us suppose that Kohala dealt with Deśī dance and music also. But a large part of the credit of having pioneered in the task of codifying Deśī music and dance seems to belong to Mataṅga.[1] It is such a conclusion that would follow from the name borne by Mataṅga's text, the Bṛhaddeśī, meaning the magnum opus of Deśī art. This would receive further support from a statement in the Bṛhaddeśī text itself which says that the Rāga-mārga not dealt with by Bharata is dealt with by Mataṅga :

रागमार्गस्य यद्रूपं यन्नोक्तं भरतादिभिः ।
निरूप्यते तदस्माभिर्लक्ष्यलक्षणसंयुतम् ॥ P. 81, TSS. edn.

As some of the quotations made in the name of Mataṅga are to be found there, the text printed as Bṛhaddeśī in TSS. XCIV may be taken to represent Mataṅga's work. Though this text bears the same name which quotations from Mataṅga associate with his work, what is presented in the TSS. publication seems to be both incomplete and mixed up with some other texts. The incompleteness of the TSS. text is borne out by the absence from it of some of the citations made in the name of Mataṅga, and the admixture of other texts by features like the colophon on p. 133 (TSS text) which mentions the text as Sarvāgamasaṁhitā. Dāmodaragupta in his Kuṭṭanīmata (śl. 854) mentions Mataṅga as a specialist on the flute ; in the Vādya chapter of his work, Śārṅgadeva too quotes Mataṅga on the flute first (VI. 651-3) and then on an instrument called Rañjā or Ruñjā (VI. 1107). This important Vādya-chapter again in Mataṅga's work is not available in the TSS. publication. In the long quotation on Cālakas given by Kallināṭha under SR. VII. 350 (p. 117 Adyar edn. Vol. IV), Mataṅga is quoted as having spoken of a Cāḷaka called Viśṛṅgāṭaka-bandha, which certainly belongs to Deśī-terminology. Kumbhakarṇa mentions seven additional Hastas as given by some followers of the Bṛhaddeśī (p. 42, Nṛtyaratnakośa, śls 513-4 : सप्तैते हस्तकास्सन्ति बृहद्देशीविदां मते ।). These point to the dance-chapters of the Bṛhaddeśī which are absent from the TSS. publication.

1. On Mataṅga, see my 'Some Names in Early Sangita Literature', J. of the Music Academy, Madras, III. pp. 19-20.

Regarding the chronological position of Matańga's text, it is later than the text of Kohala whom it quotes five times. On p. 82, the TSS. text says :

भाषा चैव विभाषा च तथा चान्तरभाषिका ।
तिस्रस्तु गीतयः प्रोक्ता याष्टिकेन महात्मना ॥
भाषागीतिर्विभाषा च मतङ्गेनाप्युदाहृता ।
भाषागीतिस्तथैकैव शार्दूलमतसंमता ॥ 289–290

i.e. in respect of Gītis, Yāṣṭika spoke of Bhāṣā, Vibhāṣā and Antarabhāṣā, Matańga of Bhāṣā and Vibhāṣā only, and Śārdūla of Bhāṣā only. This gives us the textual sequence as Śārdūla, Matańga and Yāṣṭika. Now, the TSS. text which contains large material taken from Yāṣṭika, who was later than Matańga, represents therefore a mixed text in some parts of it.

In Kallinātha's commentary on the Saṅgīta Ratnākara, (ĀSS. I. p. 82, Adyar I. p. 185) there is a reference to Matańga's explanation of a remark of Rudraṭa :

यथा यावत्षड्जमेव तारगतिर्मध्यमस्याप्यत्र संवादित्वादनाश्रित्वाच्च तारगती रुद्रटेन कृता मध्यमस्येति न दोष इति मतङ्गोक्तम् ।

If we are to understand from this that Matańga actually mentioned Rudraṭa and his view, the text of Matańga would belong to the 9th century A.D.

In the Bṛhaddeśī text now available in TSS. there are in the treatment of Jātis and Rāgas, passing references to aspects of dance or drama in which these melodies are to be sung or played. Neither in the treatment of Mārga Jātis nor of Deśī Rāgas in Matańga do we find any terms pertaining to Deśī-nṛtta ; in fact the dance-chapter as such of Matańga's text is not available in the TSS. publication. It is however in Deśī-dance and on instrumentation as pertaining to it that Jāya cites Matańga and his Bṛhaddeśī. On p. 173 (VI. 1), Jāya sets forth the sixteen foot-movements (pādas) of Deśī-dance as given by Matańga :

मतङ्गेनोदितान् देशीनृत्तशोभाविधायिनः ।
पादान् षोडशसंख्याकान् कथयामोऽधुना वयम् ॥

The second reference in Jāya (VI. 58-9) shows that Jāya had access to the full text of Mataṅga, for he quotes a line from the end of Mataṅga's treatment of Pāṭas which are a kind of leg movements and have been included under Deśī-cārīs by some writers :

देशीनृत्तस्य संक्षेपं बृहद्देश्यां निरूपयन् ।
मतङ्गोऽकथयत् पाटलक्षणावसितौ यथा ॥
'स्वबुद्धया कल्पयित्वैवमन्यानपि समाचरेत्' ।

Again, the author and the work are together .mentiond by Jāya on the Śuddha and Citra, simple and variegated, instrumentations, vādya-paddhati ; it is to be noted here that the Nṛtta-section of the Bṛhaddeśī is referred to here :

अथ पात्रस्य नृत्तार्थं कथ्यते वाद्यपद्धतिः ।
मतङ्गस्य मते प्रोक्ता बृहद्देशीविधानतः ।
नृत्तप्रकरणे शुद्धा विचित्रा चेति सा द्विधा ॥ VII. 21.

At the end of the Śuddha-type of this instrumentation, Mataṅga is again referred to by Jāya (VII. 31, p. 207).

BHAṬṬA TAṆḌU

In the Nāṭya Śāstra and Abhinavabhāratī, the name Taṇḍu appears more than once, as the name of an attendent of Śiva (Śiva-gaṇa), particularly with reference to the receiving from Śiva of the Tāṇḍava-dance and its propagation. In all these places, the name occurs only as Taṇḍu, and this kind of reference to Taṇḍu as the promulgator of Tāṇḍava occurs in Jāya too (I. 73 ; IV. 253, 372). But the form in which Jāya invariably cites this name is as Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu. The addition of Bhaṭṭa points to a historical figure and his being so is further strengthened by his being coupled with and quoted frequently together with Kīrtidhara. In fact, the Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu-quotations in Jāya are as numerous and as important as the Kīrtidhara-citations. There are 19 references to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu in the Nṛttaratnāvalī :

IV. 43: He is quoted as giving Recita- as the Hastas in the Karaṇa Śakaṭāsya.

IV. 73: The citation from him here on the Karaṇa Argala is not to be seen in the Abhinavabhāratī or the Saṅgīta Ratnākara. This shows that Jāya had direct access to his work.

„ 75: Ardhasvaṣtika-karaṇa. Here Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu is mentioned together with Kīrtidhara as giving Kaṭihasta.

„ 78: Āvarta. He gave here Recita of hands and feet.

„ 105: Lolita. According to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu, the Alāta-cārī is to be done in this.

„ 114: Atikrānta. He gave here the Garuḍapakṣas as the hand-poses.

„ 125: Sannata. Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu gave here Svastika for the hands.

„ 133: Garuḍapluta. He gives here Patāka-hands with some wrist-actions.

„ 138: Talavilāsita. On the hands again in this Karaṇa, he is quoted.

„ 147: Upasṛta. On the pose of the feet and hands in this, Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu and Kīrtidhara hold an identical opinion.

„ 148: Udvṛtta. Ākṣipta-cārī is given here by Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu.

„ 150: Avahittha. Here, according to him, the hand is to be Avahittha.

IV. 164, 165: Daṇḍapāda. On the feet movement here, the common view of Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu and Kīrtidhara is given, and on the particular hand-pose, the latter alone is quoted.

„ 177: Siṁhākarṣita. Nūpurapādikā is given here by both Kīrtidhara and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu.

„ 181: Nāgāpasarpita. Skhalita and Apasarpita on the feet according to Kīrtidhara and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu.

„ 184: Pārśvajānu. On the particular way of keeping the feet here, Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu is quoted.

„ 188: Hariṇapluta. The Cārī here is to be twice repeated according to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu.

„ 219: Gaṇḍasūcī. Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu would have here the Tripatāka as the proper hand. This would however go against the very name of the Karaṇa which has the Sūcī as its component.

„ 232: Prasarpita. The way of ' prasarpaṇa ' of the feet here, together and one after the other, is clarified by Bhaṭṭa Tandu.

„ 236: Gṛdhrāvalīna. Taking the suggestion from the Karaṇa name, Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu states that the hands that are proper here are Tārkṣyapakṣa, not Latā given by others.

From the above analysis it could be seen that firstly there are three places where Jāya refers to the tradition of the propagation of Tāṇḍava (with its Karaṇas and Aṅgahāras) and in all these places, Jāya consistently speaks of Taṇḍu. Secondly, in the 19 places where Karaṇas are dealt with, the form of the name is consistently Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu.

Thirdly, the citations show that Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu's treatment and elucidation of the Karaṇas were especially valuable. In IV. 73 (p. 111), while citing him on the Karaṇa Argala, Jāya seems to say that Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu wrote a commentary, but this is not likely; by vyākhyāna here, Jāya refers, most probably, to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu's exposition of the subject of Karaṇas.

इत्यत्र करणे प्रोक्तं व्याख्याने भट्टतण्डुना ।

Anyway, the exact nature of the text in the name of Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu cannot be known for certain from this reference.

Fourthly, a certain kinship is seen in these references between Kīrtidhara and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu whom Jāya cites together in some cases as holding the same view. There are also cases where Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu alone is quoted, as well as five cases (pp. 106, 112, 119, 120, 135) where the citations show the two holding divergent views. In one case (the Karaṇa Pārśvajānu p. 128, śl. 189), Jāya says that Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu bases himself on another reading of Bharata's text.

ऊरोरभ्यन्तरे पार्श्वे परपादाग्रसंस्थितिम् ।
भट्टतण्डुरिह ध्रुते पाठान्तरविलोकनात् ॥

To the consultation of variant-readings, Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu added his imagination and deduced details of pose and movement from a sense of what would be the most proper or natural (ucita) ones in a particular Karaṇa ; e.g. Tārkṣyapakṣa-hands in Gṛdhrāvalīna Karaṇa (p. 135, śl. 236). Above all he was well-grounded in practice and Jāya calls him Prayogavit.

एकः स्यादूर्ध्वितः क्षिप्तः परो जङ्घामुपागतः ।
करोऽभवदिति प्राह भट्टतण्डुः प्रयोगवित्॥

In the commentary of Kallinātha on ch. VII of the Saṅgīta Ratnākara (p. 105 ff Adyar, p. 675ff. ASS), there is a long quotation on arm-movements called Vartanās mentioned by Kohala ; but in the actual quotation Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu is mentioned as having set forth these 24 Vartanās.

चतुर्विंशतिरित्युक्ताः वर्तना भट्टतण्डुना ।

In the further parts of this long quotation, Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu is mentioned again in the description of Daṇḍa-vartanā.[1] A further list of arm-movements under the heading Cālaka from Kohala follows and here again Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu is mentioned as having spoken of other varieties of arms too (p. 112, Adyar). Two other references to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu here are on Vīrudhabandha (p. 117), and on Dhanurākarṣaṇa (p. 118).

These citations of Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu would show that, as in the case of Kīrtidhara's work, the work of Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu is valuable not only for offering illuminating explanations, with co-ordination of practice, on the Karaṇas of Mārga-dance, but also for recording divergent traditions, readings and classifications, and terms or names of a comparatively popular nature which were in current practice.

1. All this is reproduced by Kumbhakarṇa.

Except in two cases, these citations mention always Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu first and Kīrtidhara next, from which it may be considered likely that chronologically Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu was earlier.

KĪRTIDHARĀCĀRYA

In his commentary on the NŚ, Abhinavagupta mentions an earlier exponent of the Śāstra named Kīrtidharācārya. Three references to him by Abhinavagupta have been discussed by me in my paper on 'Writers Quoted in the Abhinavabhāratī', JOR. Madras, VI. pp. 199-200. From the last of these it is clear that Abhinavagupta had access to Kīrtidhara's text.

In a number of places in the course of the descriptions of the Nṛtta-hastas and Karaṇas, Abhinavagupta refers to alternate explanations, as also to alternate names, these latter occurring not infrequently and suggesting a whole set of parallel nomenclature given by another school in which current practice seems to have been well reflected. From the text of Jāya we come to know that this set of alternate names and explanations is really those of Kīrtidhara. It cannot be said that Jāya has simply taken these from the Abhi. Bhā. Jāya had direct access to the ms. of Kīrtidhara's work, for, where the view is cited anonymously by Abhinavagupta, there Jāya mentions Kīrtidhara by name. Not only this; Jāya speaks of Kīrtidhara in places other than those where Adhinavagupta refers to views identifiable as his. Further, although Jāya draws heavily upon Abhinavagupta, it is clear that sometimes he even prefers to follow Kīrtidhara.

On the Samyuta-hasta called Niṣadha, there is a multiplicity of views which may be seen in the Abhi. Bhā (GOS. II. p. 60, IX. 143-7). Jāya records (p. 46, II. 182) how Abhinavagupta's reading differed completely, and adds that while some later writers (e.g. Someśvara) followed Abhinavagupta, the definition first given by him (Jāya) and found in Bharata, (IX. 134-5; GOS. II. p. 60, 143-5), is the one followed by Kīrtidhara.

पूर्वलक्षणमेवास्य मेने कीर्तिधरः पुनः ।

Abhinavagupta makes no mention of this other definition or of Kīrtidhara here and this context clearly shows that Jāya had direct access to Kīrtidhara's treatise, which is yet to be discovered. Another telling instance which occurs later is under the Nṛttahasta Muṣṭikasvastika for which Jāya cites Kīrtidhara's alternate name, a fact not mentioned in the Abhi. Bhā: here. In fact one of the chief merits of the Nṛttaratnāvalī is that it gives us these glimpses into the precious work of Kīrtidhara.

The second reference to Kīrtidhara in Jāya is on the Nṛtta-hastas Ūrdhvamaṇḍalau (p. 56, śl. 265, last line) :

चक्रवर्तनिकेत्यन्यत् प्रथितं नाम लोकतः ।
प्राह कीर्तिधराचार्यः करयोरनयोरिति ॥

In the Abhi. Bhā. (GOS. II. p. 61), there is a reference to this view in a descriptive way only, without a mention of the author : तावेव पार्श्वविन्यस्ताविति वचनान्नृत्तप्रसिद्ध(चक्र)वर्तनात्मकावूर्ध्वमण्डलावित्यन्ये ।

We may, from this, take it that wherever Abhinavagupta gives a further explanation and an alternate name, for the Nṛttahastas or the Karaṇas, it is a reference to the view of Kīrtidhara. The following is the table of these names of Nṛtta-hastas, according to Bharata and Kīrtidhara :

Bharata	Kīrtidhara	Abhinavagupta-reference.	Jáya-reference.
Ūrdhvamaṇḍala	Cakravartanikā	GOS. II. p. 77.	II. 265
Parśvamaṇḍala	Kakṣavartanikā	,,	,, 267 (anon.)

of Jāya's direct

Under Cārīs, Jāya says (III. 33) that Aḍḍitā is given as Agrathā by Kīrtidhara. This is another reference not derived from Abhinavagupta and showing Jāya's own acquaintance with Kīrtidhara's work. A-grathā is probably the Sanskrit form but Abhinavagupta takes Aḍḍitā itself as Sanskrit and suggests a radical derivation for it.

A further instance of this type is Jāya's reference to a detail in the Cāri Atikrantà (III. 41) taken from Kīrtidhara's clarification. It may be noted here that Jāya pays a tribute to Kīrtidhara's understanding of Bharata's mind and his elucidation of points left unsaid by Bharata, but which could with propriety be deduced from Bharata's description.

अनुक्तत्वाद्विशेषस्य मुनिना तस्य चित्तवित्।
पादस्य पार्श्व एवेति न्यायात् कीर्तिधरोऽब्रवीत् ॥

Probably misled by this specification 'पादस्य पार्श्व एव', the late M.R. Kavi wrongly gave in the fn. here in Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 102, Pārṣṇicaṇḍaghāta as Kīrtidhara's name for Atikrāntā. In fact Abhinavagupta mentions Parṣṇicaṇḍaghāta a few lines below as a more popular name for Pārśvakrāntā, which Jāya records below under Pārśvakrāntā, identifying it as Kīrtidhara's view (p. 75, śl. 43). See Abhi. Bhā. GOS. II. p. 102. Four more alternate or popular Cārī-names as given by Kīrtidhara and mentioned by Jāya are :

Jāya, III.	21	Janità	Kīrtidhara, Musalaghāṭikā Kumbha mentions K's name here. See Notes.
,,	45	Apakrāntā	Vikṣepavalana
,,	36	Samosaritamattallī	Mattapāda
,,	38	Mattallī	Skhalatpāda

There are two more also, for Ākṣipta (śl. 55) and Udvṛtta (śl. 60), but they are not clear, the lines being corrupt.

It is in the treatment of the important subject of Karaṇas that Jāya makes many references to the views of Kīrtidhara. Here again we see that Jāya's direct access to Kīrtidhara's work is borne out by the two circumstances: one, his identifying as Kīrtidhara's, some of the opinions cited anonymously in Abhi. Bhā. and the other, his citation of Kīrtidhara in several places where Abhi. Bhā has no reference to his views. Sometimes Jāya makes a reference to Kīrtidhara as well acquainted with the practice of the art and writing on the basis of practice. The following are the Karaṇas under which Kīrtidhara's views or explanations are cited by Jāya:

Besides these, there are twenty-five places where Jāya mentions Kīrtidhara's own conception of the twenty-five Karaṇas dealt with there and these we shall examine while dealing with the Karaṇas

The references to Kīrtidhara by name found in the Abhinavabhāratī have been discussed by me in my paper on 'Writers Quoted in the Abhinavabhāratī'.[1] In the Saṅgīta Ratnākara, he is first enumerated among the authorities of the Śāstra (I. 19); in ch. VI, he is quoted on the flute (VI. 460ff.), and in Ch. VII on dance,

1. JOR, Madras, VI. pp. 199-200.

Śārṅgadeva cites him by name on the Sthāyi-dṛṣṭi called Snigdhā (śl. 395). From these it is not possible to say anything of the personality or date of the author Kīrtidhara. In one of the references in Abhinavabhāratī, he appears to quote Nandikeśvara. There is a long quotation in Kallinātha's commentary on the Saṅgīta Ratnākara under VII. 348. Vartanās, purporting to be from Kohala's treatise; here the two alternate names of Nṛtta-hastas, Khaḍgavartanikā and Padmavartanikā are mentioned as the Vartanā-names given by Kīrtidhara. These references do create some confusion in the chronological position of Kīrtidhara; but he seems to have been a historical writer of the pre-Abhinavagupta times.

The work that Kīrtidhara wrote is probably an independent treatise and not a commentary on Bharata's work. No manuscript of it has so far come to light but, as already observed, it was available to Jāya; nay, it was probably available also to a post-Jāya writer, Kumbhakarṇa; for, in two places where Jāya discusses a view-point or idea given by a writer other than Bharata, using only general words like 'apare budhāḥ', Kumbhakarṇa mentions specifically Kīrtidhara's name.

Among the Samyuta-hastas, Jāya mentions a Vardhamāna as being given by others, p. 47, śl. 190-1 : पराङ्मुखौ कीर्तयन्त्यपरे बुधाः । According to Kumbhakarṇa (Nṛtyaratnakośa, Jaipur, p. 56, śl 622), this 'Apare' who speak of the Vardhamāna-hasta refers to Kīrtidhara.

On p. 34, in verses 94-6 Jāya discusses the question why in the case of Samyuta-hastas, singular number is used and in the case of Nṛtta-hastas only, dual number is used. This discussion is reproduced by Kumbhakarṇa (ibid. p. 60) and according to Kumbhakarṇa, Kīrtidhara used the dual number, Kari-hastau (Kara-hasta in print here is a mistake for Kari-hasta).

The above examination of the Kīrtidhara-citations would show clearly the differences in the tradition followed by him and the importance of his treatment of the subject. We shall revert to this when discussing the Karaṇas. While, in almost all cases, Jāya takes pains to refer to Kīrtidhara's conception and in some instances, as pointed out above, he even follows Kīrtidhara preferentially, there is a solitary instance in which Jāya differs from his conception.

This last relates to the Aṅgahāra called Recita built of twenty-five Karaṇas, IV. 323, p. 149 :

यदत्राक्षिप्तवैशाखपूर्वके रेचिते पुनः ।
आह कीर्तिधराचार्यः तद् भवेन्नातिपेशलम् ॥

This reference and criticism do not occur in the Abhinava-bhāratī and besides showing thereby, like other similar references, Jāya's direct access to Kīrtidhara's text, it shows also Jāya's independent outlook.

ŚAṄKUKA

Jāya refers to Śaṅkuka just once when dealing with the Karaṇa Ardhanikuṭṭaka (p. 136, śl. 239). Śaṅkuka is a predecessor of Abhinavagupta, who commented on the Nāṭya Śāstra and whose views we know from Abhinavagupta's citations. Jāya derives his knowledge of Śaṅkuka's interpretation of Bharata's definition of Ardhanikuṭṭaka from Abhi. Bhā. (GOS. I. p. 104).

ABHINAVAGUPTA

Jāya mentions Bhaṭṭa Abhinavagupta by name only once (p. 46, śl. 182), but next to Bharata, it is Abhinavagupta on whom Jāya bases himself primarily; in fact, it will not be incorrect to say that it is as interpreted by Abhinavagupta that Bharata is used mostly. The Abhinavabhāratī is not only utilised at every step, in the former half of the work dealing with Mārga, but in most places Jāya's text forms but a metrical recast or resume of Abhinavagupta's commentary. Śārṅgadeva's work also shows this character, but in places, Jāya's exposition of Abhinavagupta is better, more detailed and more clear. In fact, Jāya's text is highly useful to purify the text of the Abhinavabhāratī in ms. or in print, of its corruptions, as I have shown in the footnotes, Notes and the papers on corrections and emendations to the text of the Abhinavabhāratī.[1] More than this, Jāya's text is a great help to construe passages in the Abhinavabhāratī and understand Abhinavagupta's interpretations. Both in the footnotes and Notes, attention has been drawn to the corresponding passages of the Abhinavabhāratī and Nṛttaratnāvalī.

1. Adyar Library Bulletin, XVIII. iii-iv, pp. 196-209; ibid. XXV. i-iv., Special Number pp. 397-405.

Already, when dealing with Jāya and Bharata, several instances of Jāya's close study of the Abhinavabhāratī and of how Jāya uses the latter have been noticed. Numerous other examples of this intimate study by Jāya of the Abhi. Bhā. could be seen from the Notes given at the end. To take some telling contexts, firstly, from the section on Hastas: When dealing with the uses of the Agra-Samdaṁśa, Bharata gives the collecting and stringing of flowers, and mentions just 'puṣpa' in general; to suit the Agra-Samdaṁśa, Abhinavagupta specifies the flowers as tiny flowers 'Sūkṣma-puṣpa' (GOS. II. p. 52) and Jāya's enumeration of 'Sūkṣma-puṣpa' here (p. 43, śl. 159) is due to his close following of Abhinavagupta. Among the many uses of the Mukula Hasta, Bharata (IX. 119, GOS. II. p 54) mentions simply 'hiraṇya', gold: it is Abhinavagupta who explains this gold as standing for golden bangle and the action involved as the putting on of the bangles; and in the corresponding place in Jāya (II. 165, p. 44), this particular use of Mukula is stated in very clear terms as वलयामोचने । Similarly, on the same page (44, śl. 167), among the uses of Ūrṇanābha Hasta, Jāya gives the 'touch-stone', 'karṣāśman' as one; this is found in the Abhi. Bhā. as an alternate interpretation of what Bharata simply enumerates as Prastara (stone) (IX. 121, GOS. II. p. 54). For Tāmracūḍa, Bharata mentions 'Samjñita' as a use, (GOS. II. pp. 54-55) and Jāya's expansion of this into 'beckoning boys and the like' (आह्वाने बालकादीनाम्) is based on Abhinavagupta's interpretation of 'samjñita'. Earlier under Sūcīmukha Hasta, Bharata mentions among the uses 'vallī', 'latā' and 'mañjari'; the 'vallī' 'latā' and 'mañjarī' (IX. 66-7, GOS. II. p. 42), Abhinavagupta takes pains to distinguish and as expanded by Abhinavagupta they are verbatim found in Jāya, p. 38, śl. 122. In the further uses of this same Hasta, Bharata gives (IX. 72, GOS. II. p. 44) 'gaṇḍasaṁśraya', which is somewhat obscure till we look below at the Abhi. Bhā. and see that it means 'patrabhaṅga' and similar decorations on the cheeks; in Jāya, we have not the vague 'gaṇḍasaṁśraya' of Bharata, but the specific 'patrabhaṅga' of Abhinavagupta (p. 38, śl. 126). See again under the same Hasta, Bharata IX. 75, विश्लिष्टाभ्याम्, explained further as 'तालमालान्तराभ्याम्' and Jāya's text, p. 39, śl. 129, where this latter expression is adopted. For further examples of Hastas, Jāya's text on which is based on Abhinavagupta's clarifications of Bharata's cryptic enumeration of the uses of those Hastas, see Kaṭakāvardhamāna (p. 45) and Utsaṅga p. 46). The Hasta Karaṇas and other general observations on the way to employ Hastas (pp. 49, 50) and the explanation of Bharata's

'Prāṅmukha' as really 'Parāṅmukha' (Jāya p. 53, śl. 236, GOS. II. p. 71) are also other striking examples of the intimate inter-relation of Jāya's text and the Abhi. Bhā.

Some of the telling examples in the section Nṛtta Hastas are Āviddhavakra, Jāya, p. 54, śl. 247 and Abhi. Bhā. GOS. II. p. 73; Pakṣapradyotaka, Jāya, p. 56, śl. 259 and Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 76; Daṇḍapakṣa, Jāya p. 56, śls 262-3 and Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 76; and Uraḥpārśvārdhamaṇḍala, Jāya p. 57, śls. 270-1 and Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 78.

The treatment of Karaṇas discloses numerous illustrations of this detailing Abhinavagupta closely and taking verbatim Abhinavagupta. [illegible]s or amplifications or additional elucidations. Some of the more noteworthy of these cases, dealt with in the Notes, may be mentioned here:

The detailed description of the Karaṇas one after the other is preceded in Jāya (p. 103, śls. 20-22) by general directions on how to do the Karaṇas; this is taken by Jāya from the Abhi. Bhā. (GOS. I. p. 98); especially the expression रहस्यमिदमीरितम् in Jāya (śl. 21) which goes to Abhi. Bhā. इत्युपनिषत् may be noted. Bharata has but a brief anuṣṭubh on each Karaṇa in which the position of the arms and the legs alone, with their names in an elliptic form, are given and it is Abhinavagupta who gives under each a more specific identification of the hands and also the uses of each Karaṇa. With reference to these exact identities of the hands and the uses of each Karaṇa, Jāya naturally derives his matter from the Abhi. Bhā. To note some of the Karaṇas on which Jāya and Abhinavagupta are very close: Jāya p. 104, śl. 27 and Abhi. Bhā. I. p. 97, treatment of Talapuṣpaputa. In Samanakha, Bharata gives 'Pralambita' as the poses of both arms but 'Pralambita' is not the technical name of any Hasta. As a general description, it could apply to both Latā and Dola, and it is Abhinavagupta who specifies it as Latā and adds, with reasons, that it cannot be Dola as some mistake it. This clarification given by Abhinavagupta has been taken by Jāya (p. 105, śls. 37-9). Similarly with regard to the 'Pallava' which Bharata mentions as the Hasta in Kaṭicchinna; see my footnote here on p. 107. Other examples may be seen on pp. 113-4 (śl. 88 ff.); p. 114 (śl, 94); the use of 'Gajavāhana' for the Karaṇa Niveśa (p. 109, śl. 58); the detailed description of Vakṣas-svastika (p. 110) and Argala (p. 111); the significance of plural in Bharata's text IV, 88 defining Mattalli which Abhinavagupta brings out and Jāya reproduces (p. 115) from him ; p. 124 (śl. 157) ; p 129 (śl. 189); p. 130 (śl. 196); where Abhinavagupta's specification of the Hasta as Hamsapakṣa is taken by Jāya ; and the critical observations in Jāya (p. 136 śls. 237-9) under Ardhanikuṭṭaka, with reference to Bharata's mention of the hand in it as Añcita, which are from the Abhi. Bhā. (I. p. 104).

Under Aṅgahāras again, Jāya has necessarily to depend very much upon Abhinavagupta. Out of the several contexts here pointed out in the footnotes under the respective Aṅganāras and the Notes at the end, four prominent examples concerning Aṅgahāras in general may be referred to here: Jāya, pp. 137-8, śls. 246-50, the mentions of Aṅgahāras with two, three, four or more Karaṇas, the gold as explanation of which is from Abhi. Bha. I. p. 93. putting on śls. 251-2 on the grammatical explanations of the term (II. 16 which are taken from Abhi. Bhā. (I. p. 91), as also the classifi a of Aṅgahāras into two sets (Caturaśra and Tryaśra, Jāya. p śls. 257-9) and Abhi. Bhā. (I. p. 164), the general principles to b followed in performing the Aṅgahāras and the directions to be faced while executing their constituent Karaṇas and finishing them, Jāya pp. 140-141, śls. 265-267, Abhi. Bhā. I. pp. 142, 153.

Jāya's detailed description of the Aṅgahāra Recita may also be seen (pp. 148-9, śls. 320-4); this is wholly based n Abhi. Bha I. pp. 158-159, and the word 'anyatra' in Jaya p. 149, śl. 324 refers to a verse quoted by Abhinavagupta on p. 159. The explanation of why the Aṅgahāras are only thirty-two (Jāya p. 154, śls. 356-361) is also taken from Abhi. Bhā. I. pp. 91, 164-5.

In addition to incorporating in his text Abhinavagupta's elucidations and interpretations of Bharata's laconic statements, Jāya takes also those additional explanations found in the Abhi. Bhā. which are not strictly confined to any terms or statements made by Bharata, but are all the same necessary for understanding the matter fully. Already under the Hastas, attention was drawn to Abhinavagupta's amplification of the topic of how to employ the Abhinaya-hands, (Hasta Karaṇa) under Bharata IX. 210-12 and 219 which Jāya reproduces (pp. 49-50, śls. 205-212). Also Abhi. Bhā., GOS. II. p. 69, on certain Hastas having a natural connection with an emotional condition is reproduced by Jāya (p. 53, śls. 232-4). The grammatical explanations of terms like Cārī, (p. 68, śl. 2) and Sthāna in the śl, 69-70) given by Jāya are taken from the Abhi. Bhā. (GOS. II, pp, 93, 107), as also explanations, of specific Cārī-names like Bhujaṅgatrāsita (GOS. II. p. 105, Jāya p. 75, śl. 49), and also some of the comprehensive observations on the way of doing the Cārīs (Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 106, Jāya p. 77, śls. 62-5). Towards the end of the treatment of the Cārīs, Bharata, in the course of his over-all directions on the execution of the Cārīs, states (X. 49) that just as the foot, after its Cārī-movements comes back to the ground, its resting-place, so also the hand after its movements, should come to its rest at the hip. Here Bharata mentions only 'Hasta' in general, and it is Abhinavagupta who identifies the Hasta meant as Ardhacandra if it is nṛtya and Pakṣapradyota if it is nṛtta; and this detail found in Jāya, p. 78, śl. 66, is taken from Abhinavagupta. Such cases are numerous in the more difficult section on the Karaṇas where, as explained by me in the Notes, Jāya has culled out all such precious observations of Abhinavagupta.

Jāya's text as affording an intelligent clarification of Abhinavagupta's text could be illustrated by śls. 236-7, p. 53, on Bimbasutra or Brahmasūtra and Abhinavagupta's brief statement of the straight line on the basis of the simile of the scales of a balance.

This clarification by Jāya is sometimes effected by him by bringing at one place what Abhinavagupta has stated in two different places; as examples of this may be seen p. 124, śls. 156-7 where the elucidations in the Abhi. Bhā. pp. 96 and 109, are summarised by Jāya in one place; Jaya pp. 140-1, śls. 265-267 which bring together matter in Abhi. Bhā. pp. 142, 153 (GOS. I); and Jāya p. 154, śl. 361 and Abhi. Bhā. pp. 91, 165 (GOS. I), on the reason behind Karaṇas and Aṅgahāras being of a specific number as given by Bharata.

While in most cases Jāya makes a clear and elaborate restatement of what Abhinavagupta has said, there is one case of Jāya being rather cryptic (p. 145, see fn. there), and to understand him fully, we have to read him along with Abhinavagupta at the corresponding place.

As in a solitary case with reference to Kirtidhara, where Jāya as stated above, disagrees with him, there are two rare cases with reference to Abhinavagupta in one of which Jāya does not strictly follow him, and another in which Jāya does not seem to understand the Abhi. Bhā. correctly and seems to be in some confusion. See the footnotes in the text, pp. 148 and 123, the latter especially, where the point is explained at length.

Of Jāya's references to early authorities, some are not original, but are derived from Abhinavagupta, i. e., they are merely taken from the Abhi. Bhā. Such are, as already shown, the references to Kohala, Tumburu and Śaṅkuka. Most of the references to alternate views mentioned in a general way as held by 'others' (pare, apare, anye, kecit etc.,) could also be traced to similar anonymous citations in the Abhi. Bhā. Of the numerous references to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu and Kīrtidhara, it has been shown that although many of them occur in the Abhi. Bhā., Jāya had access to the texts of these two authorities, as he gives additional references to them not found in the Abhi. Bhā. and also identifies as theirs some of the references to their views made by Abhinavagupta without mentioning their names.

The following is a full table of parallel texts in Jäya's work and the Abhi. Bha., where the former corresponds closely to the latter or derives ideas from the latter. The footnotes on the respective pages as also the additional Notes at the end may also be seen.

SOMEŚVARA

There are two places where Jāya mentions Someśvara by name, the first (p. 34, śl. 89) being the total number of Hastas and the second (p. 229, śl. 161) being the Goṇḍalī dance. The former has been discussed fully in the Notes. Besides these, there are a number of places where Someśvara has been drawn upon, anonymously, places where additional or different varieties of the aṅgas or pratyaṅgas or upāṅgas of abhinaya have been given; and all these have been identified and shown in the footnotes and the Notes in the respective places. There are many places where Jāya mentions 'others' (anye, apare etc.) and several of these are references to Someśvara; (e.g, p. 62, śls. 314-5, p. 63, śl. 320; p. 64, śl. 330, p. 65, śl. 335); 'anyatantra-vidhāyinaḥ' on p. 46 (śl. 183) refers to Someśvara.

Someśvara is the Western Chalukya King of Kalyan and the work of his which Jāya and other writers on this subject draw upon

* Abhi. Bhā. I. p. 165 l. 7, the text सन्नतं as printed should be सन्ततं, which is found as a variant in the fn. Cf. Jāya p. 155, l. 5, अश्रान्तं is the Thesaurus called Abhilaṣitārthacintāmaṇi or Mānasollāsa which the King compiled in 1131 A.D.[1]

The portion of the Mānasollāsa dealing with music and dance has not yet been printed[2] and I have traced these borrowings of Jāya from that text and given the references on the basis of a collated Transcript prepared by me from two mauuscripts of the work in the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona. Someśvara's treatment of the subject is succint but is of importance because it has divergences from Bharata and incorporates the current practice that he had seen and takes into account forms that had come into being in the subsequent times and were contemporaneously being witnessed. Thus for later writers like Jāya, Śārṅgadeva and Pārśvadeva who incorporate a considerable amount of Deśī-material in their works, Someśvara is a basic source. The Goṇḍalī or Gauṇḍalī dance is the most noteworthy of the Deśī dance-forms which later writers deal with and which was codified and set in proper form by Someśvara; while Śārṅgadeva does not mention Someśvara by name in his elaborate treatment of Gauṇḍalī-vidhi, Jāya does at some length (p. 229, VII. 161-3):

कल्याणकटके पूर्वं भूतमातृमहोत्सवे।
सोमेशः कौतुकात् काश्चित् भिल्लवेषमुपेयुषीम॥

नृत्यन्तीमथ गायन्तीं स्वयं प्रेक्ष्य मनोहरम्।
प्रीतो निर्मितवान् चित्रगोण्डलीविधिमित्ययम्॥

यतो भिल्ली महाराष्ट्रे गोण्डलीत्यभिधीयते।

How closely Jāya had studied Someśvara could be seen in some of the minor points taken by Jāya from him. For instance, on p. 44, śl. 171: in the uses of the abhinaya-hasta called Tāmracuḍa, Jāya gives 'नृपजृम्भणे' which is not in Bharata. It is in Someśvara's work that this use of Tāmracūḍa-hasta is mentioned: जृम्भणे च तथा राज्ञाम्, p. 166, śl. 6 of my collated Transcript.

On the movements of some of the aṅgas, pratyaṅgas and upāṅgas, certain additional movements or even additional limbs of the body themselves, not given by Bharata, are described by later

1. The text itself gives this date; see GOS. edn. I. p. 34, śl. 62.
2. It has since been printed and issued as GOS. 138.

writers. Jāya has this additional material and as far as our present knowledge based on available texts goes, Someśvara's work is the earliest where we can trace this material not found in Bharata. There are, of course, some additions here too in Jāya, and stray differences in nomenclature, as compared with Someśvara, but most of this material is found in Someśvara's work and what is more, Jāya mentions Someśvara by name while dealing with this material. The following will show all this:

P. 27, śls. 43-5, Jāya speaks here of four additional movements of lips, according to another school, matāntara: āyata, recita, vṛtta and vikāsī. These four are from Someśvara who gives these, along with the older six, thus counting Oṣṭha-karmans as ten (pp. 154-5, śls. 77 ff. of my Transcript).

P. 29, śls. 55-7, Jāya gives seven kinds of Hanu which is not dealt with by Bharata. It is Someśvara who speaks of Hanu and its varieties (p. 156, my Transcript) and in addition to the seven reproduced by Jāya, has a composite action of Hanu, Cala-saṁhata.

P. 29, śls. 58-61: Tongue and its movements which are not separately dealt with by Bharata. It is from Someśvara, who has dealt with them, (p. 157, my Transcript) that Jāya must have taken them. See also Notes.

P. 30, śls. 62-4: The Danta-karmans again in Jāya are not from Bharata who does not speak of them separately, but from Someśvara (p. 157, my Transcript).

P. 34, śls. 89: As already noted, Jāya makes here a mention of Someśvara by name and says how he solved the problem of keeping the total number of the Hastas as 64, by leaving out Lalita and Valita as being covered by Pallava and Latā (p. 161, my Transcript). See also Notes.

P. 46, śl. 183, on Niṣadha-hasta, Jāya notes divergent definitions in Bharata and Abhinavagupta and refers to certain other authors (anya-tantra-vidhāyinaḥ) as following the view of Abhinavagupta. The 'certain other writers' mentioned here include Someśvara who gives this definition of Niṣadha (p. 169, my Transcript).

P. 62, śls. 312-5: Jāṇu and its seven movements. These are not in Bharata. Someśvara gives exactly by name and number the same Jānu-varieties (p. 176, śls. 3949-53) as seen in Jāya, and Jāya draws upon him here.

P. 63, śl. 320, Jāya speaks here of 'pare', others giving five other Jaṅghā-movements. This 'pare' refers to Someśvara. (p. 176, my Transcript). See also Notes.

P. 64-6, śls. 329-337: After giving the Pādas according to Bharata, Jāya adds that 'others' (pare) give another set of ten Pāda-varieties, tāḍita etc. This 'pare' is most probably a reference to Someśvara who has these, though with some difference (pp. 177-8, my Transcript). See also fns. on p. 65 of Text and Notes at the end.

Pp. 66-7, Pādāṅgulīs, fingers: These are not in Bharata but are given by Someśvara wherefrom Jāya must have taken them (pp. 178-9, my Transcript). See also Notes.

Jāya uses Someśvara's work on the Deśī also:

On pp. 159-60, he deals with the twenty-three Deśī-sthānakas, twenty-one of which Someśvara has described, calling them simply 'sthānakas' (pp. 179-180, my Transcript). See the elaborate Notes on this at the end.

On pp. 163-9, Jāya deals with the Utpluti-Karaṇas, coming under Deśī. Here again, he draws material from Someśvara, though he supplements it from some other source. On the Kapāla-sparśana here (p. 138, śl. 78), Jāya prefers this name given by Someśvara and rejects the name Kapāla-cūrṇa given by others. The detailed Notes at the end on this topic may also be seen.

Pp. 181 ff., śls. 59 ff. Jāya gives here, as part of the Deśī, a large number of movements of the legs and feet and says that the old teachers or authorities (Cirantanācāryas) devised a number of feet-movements, which they defined as Deśī-cārīs of both the varieties, the Bhauma, maintaining floor-contact and Ākāśika, aerial or involving jump. In the former (Bhauma), twenty-six are given and in the latter, sixteen. Now all these Deśī-cārīs (26 plus 16), with the same names and definitions, are to be met with in Someśvara (pp. 182-188, my Transcript). We may, therefore, take the Cirantanā-cārya of Jāya in śl. 59, p. 181 as referring to Someśvara.

There is also one other non-technical context where Jāya discloses his close acquaintance with Someśvara's work. On p. 202, when describing the places suitable for setting up a dance-stage, Jāya paraphrases in line 1 of śl. 2, a couple of lines from Someśvara on the same topic, at the end of the dance-section of his Thesaurus (p. 191, my Transcript). See fn. on p. 102.

OTHERS

In addition to authorities cited by name, who have been noticed above, Jāya cites many times divergent views or additional material or alternate names with the general reference 'others', 'some others' 'another view',—' anye, apare, ācāryāḥ, eke, kecit, kaiścit, pare, matāntare. The following is the full list of such anonymous references to others, by pages and ślokas:

14.72 ; 17. 19 ; 46.179, 183 ; 47.19 ; 50.214 ; 51. 216 ; 52. 223, 228 ; 54. 246 ; 55. 254, 256 ; 56.258, 266 ; 57. 269 ; 58. 281, 282, 283 ; 70.21 ; 72. 32 ; 73. 35 ; 76. 52 ; 84. 107, 109 ; 89. 129 ; 105. 38, 39 ; 112. 79, 82 ; 114.90 ; 115. 99 ; 122. 153 ; 124.157 ; 133. 218 ; 138. 248 ; 151.335 ; 154.357, 358, 360 ; 155. 365 ; 165.56 ; 168. 78, 79 ; 169. 87 ; 181. 59 ; 187. 110 ; 190. 132.

Not all these need be taken as references to unknown authors. Some of them refer to the same authorities who are mentioned by name in other contexts and who have been considered above at some length. From what has been shown already, the following of these references to 'others' are identifiable as those to Kīrtidhara and Someśvara :

46. 183 ; 47. 191 ; 70. 21 and 181. 59 ; and probably also 73. 35-36, 38.

Quite a number of the others are not original but go to the Abhinavabhāratī where itself they occur as references to 'others', 'some' and so on. This set of references going to the Abhinava-bhāratī are :

14.72 (two additional lāsyāṅgas ; these two occur in some recensions of Bharata's text itself) ; 46. 179 ; 52. 228 ; 54. 246 ;

55.254, 256 ; 56. 258 ; 56-57. 266-7 ; 57.269 ; 58. 281 ; 72.32 ; 105. 38, 39 ; 112. 79, 82 ; 114. 90 ; 115. 99 ; 122. 153 ; 124. 157 ; 133. 218 ; 138. 248 ; 151. 335 ; 154. 357, 358, 360 ; 155. 365.

Some of these references on Karaṇas, mentioning the alternate names in terms of Vartanā, are likely to be references to Kīrtidhara.

If we leave out the above, the cases of anonymous references which remain to be examined as to their likely identities become sixteen :

17.19 : Eleven additional heads. The source of these is not known ; some of these occur also in the Sangīta Ratnākara.

50. 214 ; 51. 216 : Additional Hasta-pracāras. See Bharata and Abhinavabhāratī, GOS. II. p. 70, which correspond to Jāya 50. 213. The additional Hasta-pracāras discussed here are not in the Abhi. Bhā., but are to be seen in the Saṅgīta Ratnākara 52, 223 : Six other actions of hands. They are seen just as given in Jāya, in the Saṅgīta Ratnākara, but two of them seem to occur in Bharata IX. 221 (GOS.).

58.282 : On the Nṛtta-hasta Lalita : The matter referred to with the mention of ' pare ' here is partly found in the Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 79.

58-59. 283, 286 : The additional Hastas mentioned here as given by others are seen in the Sangīta Ratnākara.

76.52 : Jāya says here that some writers consider the Āviddhā Cārī to be preceded by Ākṣiptā. In fact, that is the sequence found in Bharata itself, but we do not know if any writer specifically incorporated this idea as part of the definition of the Āviddhā as Jāya's words would suggest.

84. 107 : Under Upaviṣṭa-sthānas ; the alternate name Krānta for the Sthāna Yoga-kṛta is to be seen in the Saṅgīta Ratnākara.

84. 109 : In the same context ; the alternate name for Cintākṛta, namely Madalasā, is seen in the Saṅgīta Ratnākara.

165. 56 : The alternate name Uroñcita for the Utpluti-karaṇa called Laṅkādāhāñcita. It has not been possible to trace the source of this alternate name.

168. 78 : The alternate name Kapāla-cūrṇa for Kapāla-sparśa. This could be seen in the Saṅgīta Ratnākara and Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra.

168. 79 : Nataprṣṭha, alternate name according to some, for the Karaṇa Vyaṅkola. This too is to be seen in the Saṅgīta Ratnākara.

169. 87 : Antarbhramarī and Bāhyabhramarī. These are found in the Saṅgīta Ratnākara.

187. 110 : Here are given by Jāya four additional Cārīs according to others. These are not to be found in Someśvara or Śārṅgadeva ; only one of them could be traced in Pārśvadeva.

190. 132 : On a different description of the Deśī Lāsyāṅga called Lali. This can be traced to the Saṅgīta Ratnākara where it is found as Laḍhi.

The above examination shows that of the sixteen anonymous references to 'others', eleven are known to be or may be taken as references to Śārṅgadeva ; of the other five, none could be fully traced to any other known source ; two are partially seen in the Abhinavabhāratī itself, one partially in the Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra and one other partially in the Saṅgīta Ratnākara ; and only one (165.56) could not be traced to any source, even partially.

ŚĀRNGADEVA

Even as the Nṛttaratnāvalī does, the Saṅgīta Ratnākara provides us with an excellent resume of the Abhinavabhāratī, sometimes amounting, in a more prominent manner, to a metrical paraphrase of Abhinavagupta. Jāya wrote his work in A.D. 1253-4 under Kākatīya Gaṇapati. Śārṅgadeva wrote his Saṅgīta Ratnākara under the Yādava Siṅghaṇa, who ruled from probably A.D. 1208 upto 1247 when he died. Śārṅgadeva was Accountant-General under Siṅghaṇa and his work cannot be dated later than 1247. The Nṛttaratnāvalī was therefere written subsequent to the Saṅgīta Ratnākara. The two texts were written in contiguous parts of the country and if Jāya does not mention Śārṅgadeva or his work by name, there should be strong reason for it. Such reason is provided by the political relations which prevailed between the Kākatīyas and the Yādavas and which have already been referred to (See above, Introduction p. 9). A Yādava inscription[1] says that Siṅghaṇa's predecessor released Kākatīya Gaṇapati from prison and re-established him on his throne. Mahādeva, Gaṇapati's father, attacked Devagiri and died in action, and the son was captured by the Yādavas. This should have produced a feeling of resentment in the Kākatīya court against the Yādavas and naturally the work produced under Siṅghaṇa is not mentioned by name in the work produced under Gaṇapati.

The internal evidence, however, discloses Jāya's knowledge of the Saṅgīta Ratnākara. As already seen, some of the additional material or divergent scheme of classification or alternate nomenclature referred to anonymously by Jāya is to be seen in the Saṅgīta Ratnākara. While it is not ruled out that both Śārṅgadeva and Jāya might have drawn on a common source not now extant, like the work of Bhoja, as far as the available literature shows, the earliest source to which we can trace this material is the Saṅgīta Ratnākara. Indeed, from a few cases, it appears that the Saṅgīta Ratnākara is the text kept in mind by Jāya.

Pp. 26-7, śls. 39, 40: On the two actions of the lip, Visarga and Vinigūhana, there is correspondence between Jāya and Śārṅgadeva, but as the seeds for this correspondence could be seen in Bharata and as the Abhinavabhāratī on this portion is missing, we cannot assume here any dependence of Jāya on Śārṅgadeva, on these two Abhinayas.

P. 34, śls. 94-6, the use of Singular number for Samyuta-hastas (double hands) like Añjali, but dual number for Nṛtta-hastas where also both hands are used. In the Notes to these three verses, I have shown the basis in the Abhinavabhāratī (on IX. 10, 184) for Jāya's detailed explanation. It may be noted that a detailed explanation, corresponding to what Jāya gives, is also found in the S. R. (VII 249-254, Adyar), but what Jāya and Śārṅgadeva say seem to be two parallel elaborations of Abhinavagupta.

Pp. 50-51, śls. 213-6: Jāya speaks here of five Hasta-pracāras according to Bharata, then ten according to others, and then five according to still some others. In fact, Bharata (GOS. IX. p. 69, śl. 181) gives only three arm-movements;

1. From Bahal, Mysore State.

it is in śl. 182 that five are given, and the Abhi. Bhā. notes that the five are what Bhaṭṭa Udbhaṭa read and three are enough since Udbhaṭa's Adhastala is included in Bharata's Adhomukha, Agraga in Uttāna and Tryaśra in Pārśvaga. While Jāya fails to note this, Śārṅgadeva has taken special note of Bhaṭṭa's i.e. Abhinavagupta's criticism.

अन्तर्भूतं वदन् भट्टः त्रित्वमेव समादधे। S. R. VII. 534.

In śl. 214, Jāya mentions the ten additional arm-movements Ūrdhva-tala, Adhas-tala, Tiryak-tala, Agra-tala and Sammukha-tala, and Mukha being qualified by Ūrdhva etc. In śl. 216, the same five directions Ūrdhva etc. are given, qualified by 'gata' or movement.

Now these fifteen additional Hasta-pracāras are to be seen in the S.R. VII. 534-547, (Adyar edn) That it is Śārṅgadeva whom Jāya is having in mind when he speaks of others giving these additional arm-movements seems to force itself on us, for Śārṅgadeva expressly says here that it is he himself who gives out, i.e. for the first time, these ten and five additional Hasta-pracāras:

—इत्येतान् प्रचारान् दश पञ्च च।
लक्ष्यलक्षणतत्त्वज्ञः शार्ङ्गदेवोऽभ्यभाषत॥

P. 52, śl. 224: After describing the ten kinds of Bāhus as dealt with by Bharata, Jāya gives six more, Sarala, Āndolita, Namra, Ūdveṣṭita. Utsārita, and Prasārita, according to others. These six additional ones, with different names in two cases, are found in S. R. VII. 337 but as Śārṅgadeva himself introduces them as 'mentioned by others', there is no question of Jāya being indebted to Śārṅgadeva here.

Pp. 58-9, śls. 283-6, Jāya says here that according to others, there are three additional Hastas, the single hand (Asamyuta-hasta) called Nikuñcaka, the double (Samyuta) called Dviśikhara and the Nṛtta-hastas Varada-abhaya. These are given, as far as we know now, by Śārṅgadeva. S. R. VII. 283-286. It may be noted that in the actual definition of the last, the Varada-abhaya, Jāya omits Śārgadeva's requirement that the hands should be Arālas here; Jāya has them simply as Patākas, a more proper view which the Saṅgītamuktāvali follows.

Pp. 70-9, śls. 69-72: Jāya defines here Sthāna; although the basic ideas here are derived from the Abhi. Bhā. (GOS. II. p. 107), it can be seen by comparing the lines in Jāya with those in the S.R., (VII. 1018-9, Adyar) that almost the same expressions are to be found in both the texts and the impression that Jāya is using the S. R. cannot fail to occur.

P. 84, śl. 107: The seated pose (Upaviṣṭa-sthānaka) called Yoga-kṛta is said to be called Krānta by others; Śārṅgadeva describes it with the name Krānta. S. R. VII. 1098. In Śl. 108, similarly Cintākṛta is said to be called Madālasa by others and it is found that Śārṅgadeva calls it so. S.R. VII. 1096-7.

P. 87, śls. 118-9, Sthānakas of women. See the detailed foot-note here. The texts of Jāya and Śārṅgadeva run very close, even verbally, thogh Jāya adds one more, Pronnata, to the four in Śārṅgadeva. Sometimes close verbal conrespondence may be seen between the texts of Jāya and Śārṅgadeva, but where this relates to topics or ideas traceable in Abhinavagupta, this parallel between these two writers is due to their common base in the Abhi. Bhā. While many instances could be cited to illustrate this, even a small case will spotlight it effectively:

On p. 91, śl. 141, when beginning the subject of Maṇḍalas, Jāya says in explanation of what Maṇḍala means:

हेतोश्चारीप्रयोगस्य प्राचुर्यान्मण्डलान्यपि ।
भौमान्याकाशगानीति प्रसिद्धानि तदाख्यया ॥

In the same context, Śārṅgadeva has (VII. 1146 Adyar, 1156 ĀSS.):

भौमाकाशिकचारीणां प्राचुर्यान्मण्डलान्यपि ।
भौमान्याकाशिकानीति व्यपदेशं प्रपेदिरे ॥

Both these above are versifications of what Abhinavagupta says briefly (GOS. II. p. 119):

आकाशभूचारिप्राचुर्यान्मण्डलेषु तथात्वम् ।

P. 168, śl. 78, under Utpluti Karaṇas of Deśī, Jāya says that the Karaṇa called Kapāla-sparśana is called by others Kapāla-cūrṇa. As pointed out in the footnote on that page, this other name is seen in the S. R. The next Karaṇa Vyaṅkola is said to be called Nataprṣṭha according to others; Śārṅgadeva (VII. 708-9, Adyar) uses Nataprṣṭha as the main name and Vyaṅkola as that given by others. This therefore would not be a decisive evidence of Jāya's indebtedness to Śārṅgadeva. In śl. 87, p. 139, two Deśī-bhramarīs are said to be called Bāhya and Antar Bhramarīs; these two names are seen in the S.R. VII. 775-6. On the Deśī Lāsyāṅga, an alternate definition, according to others, is recorded by Jāya in śl. 1321 p. 190, and this definition can be traced to the S. R. VII. 1209-10.

P. 173, ch. VI. śls 1 ff.: Sixteen Deśī Pādas, as given by Mataṅga, are described by Jāya here. As pointed out in the footnote on p. 173, these are to be seen in the S.R. as well as in the Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra: in both these latter works a much larger number of these are dealt with. They are dealt with under Deśī Cāris by Śārṅgadeva who gives thirty-five of them: Pārśvadeva deals with them as Deśī Pādas, as Jāya does but he also gives much more than Jāya, though the exact number cannot be made out. It is therefore difficult to say from this context whether Jāya has here drawn upon the S.R.

In ch. 7, p. 230, śls. 166-71, Jāya describes the master dancer or dance-master, Nartaka whom Śārṅgadeva calls Upādhyāya, S. R. VII. 1247-51 (Adyar). The description in the two writers is very close, as shown in the tabulation of the requirements of a Nartaka in my Notes at the end. The correspondence is strikingly close, but the possibility of both drawing upon a common source is not ruled out.

PĀRŚVADEVA

On the question of the relation of the Nṛttaratnāvalī and the Saṅgīta Ratnākara, we had, in addition to parallel ideas and expressions, the external help of the known chronological sequence of the two texts to decide the matter. But in the case of the authority to be discussed now, we do not have this external help but as in the case of the internal evidences in the former case, here too we have at least one decisive context which would prove that Jāya knew the work of this authority viz. the Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra of Pārśvadeva. The chronological position of the Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra has been an intriguing question in the history of the literature of music[1], and what will be shown presently would be the first clear evidence ever to be cited to indicate at least a closer, though yet relative, date for Pārśvadeva and his text.

1. See my "Some Names in Early Saṅgīta Literature", J. of the Music Academy, Madras, III. p. 30.

The Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra of the Jain writer Pārśvadeva has been published in the Trivandrum Sanskrit Series (No. 87) but the text presented there is incomplete and most defective. I have collated more manuscripts of it for an improved edition, offering the full text; and what I say in the sequel about Pārśvadeva's work is based on its printed text as well as my manuscripts of it.

As I have already shown[1], Pārśvadeva mentions by name Bhoja, Someśvara, Pratāpa and Paramardī[2]; of these we definitely know of Someśvara and his work which has been dealt with above and which was wriiten in 1131 A. D. Paramardī flourished a little later[3]. The last quarter of the 12th Century would therefore furnish an upper limit to Pārśvadeva's date. The earliest writer to quote Pārśvadeva by name is Siṅgabhūpāla, (C. 1380 A.D.), author of a commentary on the Saṅgīta Ratnākara, and this would furnish us with the lower limit. The evidence of the Nṛttaratnāvalī helps us to narrow down these limits further.

An important subject to which Jāya devotes special attention is the elaborate description of Deśī Lāsyāṅgas in Ch. VI, śls. 117ff. This was a subject which was gaining importance at the hands of the writers of this age. Śārṅgadeva is rather brief, giving only ten of them. The Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra and the Nṛttaratnāvalī give many more, the former twenty and our text forty-six. As Jāya says

1. See J. of the Music Academy, Madras, III. p. 30.

2. See p. 5, T.S.S. edn.; in addition to this, in verse two at the beginning, available in the MSS., and missing in the printed text, Pārśvadeva mentions Bhoja and Someśvara among his authorities:

   लोके दत्तिलकोहलानिलसुताः सोमेश्वरस्तुम्बुरुः
   शास्त्रं भोजमतङ्गकश्यपमुखा व्यातेनिरे ते पुरा।

   See also p. 93 of the printed text where at the beginning of the Tāla chapter, Pārśvadeva again mentions Someśvara.

3. J. of the Music Academy, Madras, III. pp. 27–28.

expressly at the outset here, he is taking special efforts to set forth these Lāsyāṅgas clearly :

देशीलास्यस्य भेदानां प्रसिद्धानां समासतः ।
प्रव्यक्तानि विधास्यामः लक्षणान्यधुना वयम् ॥

But from his calling these as 'prasiddha', we have to suppose that, although he clarified their conception, they had been known already. Now, if we examine the Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra and its treatment of Deśī Lāsyāṅgas, we find Pārśvadeva saying here in so many words that earlier writers did not speak of these and he was doing so for the first time.

अत्र पूर्वैरनुक्तानि देश्यङ्गानि वदाम्यहम् । P. 71

—a statement which could be justified only by assuming Pārśvadeva's priority to Jāya. This would clinch Pārśvadeva's date further as the century between Jāya, A.D. 1253, and Someśvara and Paramardī, C. 1131-65.

There are other contexts where close parallels could be seen between the texts of Jāya and Pārśvadeva, especially on topics of Deśī, on which the Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra provides valuable material. In Ch. VII, p. 211, śl. 57, Jāya describes the aṅga Vikaṭa of the Deśī dance Peraṇa, and says that some call this Vāgada according to the Bhāṇḍīka parlance.

कैश्चिद् वागडमित्युक्तं भाण्डीकानां प्रसिद्धितः ।

Pārśvadeva does not call this aṅga Vikaṭa but gives it the name Vāgaḍa.

विकटाभिनयोपेतं वागडं तत्प्रचक्षते ।
P. 73, śl. 218.

At the beginning of his work, Pārśvadeva has stated that the Bhāṇḍīka terminology came from Bhoja and Someśvára; Bhoja's work is not available and this kind of description of Peraṇa and its aṅgas is not to be seen in the Abhilaṣitārtha-cintāmaṇi; it is in the Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra that we have a specific mention of this Peraṇa-aṅga as Vāgaḍa.

We may take another context where Jāya seems to repeat the words of Pārśvadeva. Towards the end of the section on Deśī

Paddhati, in the description of the feature called Puṣpāñjali, Jāya says (p. 214, śls. 74–5) :

पुष्पाञ्जलिरनेनैव क्षेप्य इत्युपचारतः ।
एतदेव मतं लोके पुष्पाञ्जलिरिति स्फुटम् ॥
हुडुक्काकरटादेशीपटहाद्यन्तरा भवेत् ।
शब्दे श्रव्यत्वहेतुत्वात् कांस्यतालं निवारयेत् ॥

It is in the Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra that this is called Puṣpāñjali (p. 52, śl. 132 and p. 55, śls. 165-7) and it is Pārśvadeva who says that, according to him, the playing of a particular class of rhythm-instruments is not proper.

शब्दः पुष्पाञ्जलौ युक्तो हुडक्काकरटान्तरी ।
इतरे चान्तरीशब्दा नैव तास्सम्मता मम ॥

This express statement of Pārśvadeva of his own view and Jāya's reference to it, as well as to the name Puṣpāñjali being given to it in the former and the latter's reference to that also, makes it most likely that Jāya was having Pārśvadeva's work before him.

There is close correspondence also in the description of the Deśī dance called Prekkhaṇa in Jāya (p. 215, śls. 77-79) and Pārśvadeva (p. 73, sls. 223-4).

On the Deśī dance next described by Jāya, the text of Jāya has some correspondences with that of Pārśvadeva (p. 73). See my footnotes on pp. 211-3.

Further correspondence of this type could be seen below in the detailed and tabulated comparative study of the Deśī dance forms and the details of their constituent elements and performance as set forth in the Nṛttaratnāvalī, the Saṅgīta Ratnākara and Saṅgīta Samaya Sāra.

DEŚĪNṚTTASAMUDRA

I have reserved the consideration of this name to the end. In the beginning of ch. VI, Jāya speaks of sixteen Pādas of Deśī as set forth by Mataṅga, and follows it up with twenty-eight further actions of the feet, called Pāda-or Pāṭa-maṇis. (VI. 14ff.). When introducing the latter, Jāya says he has taken out from the ocean of Deśī dance some of the beautiful leg-movements.

देशीनृत्तपयोराशेः प्रेक्षकाणां मनोहराः ।
विचित्राः कतिचित्पाटमणयोऽस्माभिरुद्धृताः ॥

The expression Deśī-nṛtta-payorāśi, I had first taken as a general figurative description of the Deśī dance. The general impression is that on Deśī dance, as on Deśī-music, the most important treatise is Mataṅga's Bṛhaddeśī. But from an extract made by Kallinātha in his commentary on the Saṅgītaratnākara, it appears that there was another treatise on Deśī of considerable size and importance bearing the above expression as its very name, Deśīnṛtta-samudra. As this quotation occurs under the name of Kohala and over the colophon Saṅgītameru, a dialogue between Kohala and Śārdūla, the text seems to be an old one and this is further supported by the quotation mentioning Nārada as the speaker in it. In this extract, to which I have already drawn attention above under Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu (p. 50), we read that in the text called Deśīnṛtta-samudra, Nārada spoke of seven hundred cālakas or arm-movements.

नारदेनापि मुनिना तथा सप्तशतं मुने ।
देशीनृत्तसमुद्राख्ये कीर्तिताश्चालकाश्च वै ॥

Commentary on S.R., p. 112, Adyar edn.

From this it is clear that besides Mataṅga's Bṛhaddeśī, there was another large work on Deśī ascribed to Nārada, called Deśī-nṛttasamudra which also Jāya used.

JĀYA'S REFERENCES TO HIMSELF

A set of references in which Jāya mentions himself and his own opinions may now be examined with a view to find out if in these places, Jāya offers any independent or original views of his own or his own solutions to problems. When noticing the earlier authors from Bharata downwards and the relation in which Jāya's work stands to their works, attention has already been drawn to the value of Jāya's interpretations and elucidations. It is to be expected that his own originality and specific contribution would be conspicuous at places where he specially mentions himself and his own views. These references are to be seen in terms of Jāyana, Gajasādhanika etc., Vayam and Man-matam; they occur on pp. 14, 67, 78, 99, 100, 136, 151, 154, 157, 158, 160, 172, 173, 174, 186, 188, 201 and 209; occasionally such a reference is seen also with a mere use of the verb in the first person e.g. स्वयं मन्यामहे। (P. 76).

P. 14, Śl. 72: 'तत्र मन्यामहे वयम्।' This is on the subject of the two additional Lāsyāṅgas which are already found in some recensions of Bharata's text. Abhinavagupta explains how these two additions are superfluous and Jāya follows Abhinavagupta. Jāya's reference to his own view here is therefore to his following Abhinavagupta's view.

P. 67, śl. 346: 'प्रोक्तं जायचमूपेन मुनेराशयवेदिना।' This is a colophonic statement rounding off his treatment of Āṅgikābhinaya. The epithet here that Jāya is one who has understood Bharata's mind is, as already pointed, quite justified.

P. 76, śl. 54: On the execution of the Ākāśika Cārī called Nūpurapādikā, Jāya first gives the detailed mode of doing it as explained by Abhinavagupta. The bent leg should be taken back so that the heel touches the buttock and then the whole fore-leg should quickly and forcefully hit the ground on the side. That the foot should strike the ground on the side is Abhinavagupta's additional elucidation. In Bharata, only the ground is mentioned and not the direction. Jāya adds that in his own view, the resultant grace and beauty are the important things and according to that requirement the leg, after touching the buttock, could be brought down to strike the ground just straight below, without aiming at the side. This is clearly a case of Jāya's own contribution based on practical knowledge.

P. 78, śl. 66: Here again, Jāya has an observation based on the sanction of actual practice. The context is that at the end of a co-ordinated pattern of movement, when the artiste reaches a point of rest, the hands should come to their place of rest viz. the hips. That is what Bharata says in brief (X. 49, GOS.). But, when they do so, what poses the hands should or would naturally take is a question which Abhinavagupta clarifies; he says that if the context is interpretative dance or Nṛtya, the hands would be Ardhacandra and if it is pure rhythmic dance, Nṛtta, they would be either Pakṣapradyota or Pakṣavañcita. Jāya, as is usual with him, first gives the details according to Abhinavagupta ; but adds that as they see it in actual practice, in Nṛtya, all the three hands are in use.

एतत् त्रयमपि ब्रूमो नृत्ये लक्ष्यनिरीक्षणात् ।

P. 99, śl. 198 : A colophonic mention of the author.

P. 100, śl. 1 : A similar mention of the author's name at the beginning of the chapter and of the treatment of a new subject.

P. 136, śl. 243 : A colophonic statement that the author has concluded the section on Karaṇas.

P. 151, śl. 340 : अङ्गहारा मयाख्याताः परिवृत्तकरेचिते ।

Here, as in the first instance noted above, Jāya's mention of his having set forth the sequence in the Aṅgahāra Parivṛttaka-recita means only that he has carefully described it according to Abhinavagupta. Except in the last three lines 339-40, where Jāya expands a brief statement of Abhinavagupta that the earlier Karaṇas here are to be done facing each of the four quarters and the last two, which conclude the Aṅgahāra, facing the audience, the rest of the description in Jāya is a reproduction of the Abhi. Bhā.

P. 154, śl. 361, 'वयं तु.....इति चक्ष्महे' on the reason why Aṅgahāras are only thirty-two. This again is not original, but refers to Jāya's acceptance of an explanation given by Abhinavagupta. See footnote on that page.

P. 158, śl. 2, a statement that Jāya begins the treatment of Deśī.

P. 160, śl. 18, on the Deśī-sthānaka Parāvṛtta. Jāya's statement that he has thus defined Parāvṛtta may be justified in as much as the description of this Sthāna is more brief in Someśvara, Śārṅgadeva and Pārśvadeva.

P. 172, śl. 106, the reference here is to Jāya's work on music, the Gītaratnāvalī.

P. 174, śl. 14, a statement at the beginning of the topic, Pāṭa-maṇis that Jāya is dealing with that subject. But such a statement is significant in this particular context, for as far as our present knowledge goes, Jāya is the earliest to deal, under one head, with these Deśī leg-movements numbering twenty-eight. Jāya says here that he has taken these from the work called Deśinṛttasamudra.

P. 186, śl. 100. —दण्डपादेति मन्मतम् । This is a case of Jāya offering his own definition of the Deśī Ākāśa Cārī called Daṇḍapādā. This Cārī is defined in verses 99-100, and first Jāya gives a definition which is the same as found in the Saṅgītaratnākara and then says that according to his own view, the Daṇḍapāḍā is to be done in a different manner.

P. 188, śl. 112: After describing Deśī-Cārīs which are found in other works also, Jāya gives a set of four Cārīs, which except for the last, are not to be found in other works. The second Cārī described here is called Hamsaruta and its description, Jāya says at the end, is given by himself.

तदा हंसरुतं ब्रूते पादं जायचमूपतिः ।

Hamsaruta is the lifting up of one foot and moving it in air in accordance with the rhythm and the syllables recited for the rhythm, with the anklets making a fine sound; it is from this sound of the ankle-bells which alone are heard that the movement is called Hamsa-ruta, the notes of the swan or the sound of the anklets. In Kathak, ankle-bells are thus sounded in accordance with the rhythm for quite a long time, but without lifting the foot. This is a case where there is something which seems to be really Jāya's own contribution.

One of the references of Jāya to himself, p. 172, śl. 106, stands on a different footing. This mentions another treatise of Jāya, on music which from its name, Gītaratnāvalī, seems to be a companion volume to the present work. This work on music when unearthed could be expected to throw a good deal of light on the topics of the Nṛttaratnāvalī too, as Gīta and Nṛtta are intimate Samāna tantras.

VIII

WRITERS INDEBTED TO JĀYA

Having dealt with the writers whom Jāya has drawn upon, we may take note also of those who have drawn upon Jāya. The citations of Jāya in later works are not commensurate with the importance of his work, but it cannot be said that the work was in undeserved obscurity. The very fact that a Devanāgarī manuscript of it has been preserved outside South India is evidence of the wide use made of it. Apart from a non-South Indian manuscript of it, we actually find, from our comparative study, that Kumbhakarṇa of Mewad (A.D. 1433-68), author of the Saṅgītarāja, used it in the dance-chapter of his work. This I have shown in the footnotes on pp. 220, 225 and 246-7; some of the parallels in Kumbha, pointed out here, are pretty close to Jāya. In the region itself where Jāya wrote, namely Andhra, the Reddi King Komaṭivema (A.D. 1402-1420) made liberal use of Jāya's work for his Saṅgītacintāmaṇi. See footnotes on pp. 174, 177-8, 180-3, 209-10 and 221 of the text and the Introduction, p. 6 above. In Tanjore where two Telugu manuscripts of the work had been preserved, the Nṛttaratnāvalī was used by the Mahratta King Tulaja in the dance-chapter of his Saṅgītasārāmṛta, where he twice extracts from Jāya's work. See footnotes on pp. 7-9 and 205-6 of the Text and my Introduction to Tulaja's work.[1]

NOTEWORTHY POINTS IN JĀYA'S TREATMENT

During the examination of the relation of Jāya's text with those of other writers, a number of points on which Jāya's treatment is noteworthy has been noticed. Also when considering cases where Jāya refers to himself, ideas on which Jāya had his own views or which could be taken as his own contribution were noted. There are several other matters which, on a detailed examination of the contents of the work, would show the value of Jāya's exposition. I may, in this connection, first deal with two subjects in dance which are of major importance and then draw attention to several other noteworthy points.

The Karaṇas form an important aspect of Mārga dance and in the Deśī-developments, the concept of Deśī, its constitutent elements and the folk, regional or popular dance-forms form the important subjects. I shall now devote some attention to these and see what significant material Jāya has to offer to us on these subjects.

THE KARAṆAS

The Karaṇa is a unit of a dance-sequence called Aṅgahāra. The Karaṇa itself is a particular combination of bodily movements comprising chiefly the disposition of the hands and the legs. This is the essence of the dance, and although the old names of these poses had become obsolete in later times, the material as such, as I have shown elsewhere, has not changed and either in whole or in part, under diverse later and local nomenclature, these poses or parts of them persisted and could still be recognised in the surviving dance-forms.

1. Edn., Music Academy, Madras, pp. xxv-xxvii.

The variety and beauty of these Karaṇas, numbering hundred and eight, in their classic conception, are themselves such that a study and assimilation of these in a proper manner would form a great enrichment of our dance-traditions in their surviving forms to-day. The detailed examination and correlation of Karaṇas form a desideratum in Nāṭya-studies; it is not only a fruitful investigation but would form a highly interesting subject, especially because there is conspicuous and concrete external testimonia to help in the study of the textual description of these.

On the textual side, we have the verses in Chapter IV of Bharata's Nāṭya Śāstra which form our starting point. Next to Bharata, we have the elucidations of Abhinavagupta. A third factor, which arises out of the Abhinavabhāratī, is the treatment or descriptions of the Karaṇas in a way different from that of Bharata, given by certain post-Bharata exponents who preceded Abhinavagupta like Kīrtidhara and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu. The further point in this line in the textual description of the Karaṇas is the work of the important post-Abhinavagupta writers, particularly Śārṅgadeva and our own author, Jāya.

On the side of external aids to the study of the Karaṇas, we have such help as is not prabably available on any other aspect of Indian dance, this circumstance itself showing, by the way, the central importance of the Karaṇas in the whole field of dance. There are available to us visual representations of the Karaṇas which are valuable because they help not only in the checking of the proper pose in each but also in conveying to us more concretely a picture of each which is not easy to obtain from the laconic verbal descriptions of these in single short anuṣṭubh verses in Bharata.

For a long time, the only such visual and concrete aid we had was the sculptures of the Karaṇas in the towers of the Śrī Naṭarāja Temple at Chidambaram. The usefulness of these is doubled by the fact that in addition to the figures, the panels carry also Bharata's verse on each Karaṇa. More recently a series of the Karaṇa-sculptures of a larger size, but not of the complete set of hundred and eight, had come to light in the first floor of the Big Temple at Tanjore. Though incomplete, this series of representations is valuable for comparative study. Subsequently, a closer scrutiny of the scultptures on the towers of some other temples in South India has shown at least three more serial representations of the Karaṇas, namely, those in the Śārṅgapāṇi Temple at Kumbhakonam and in the temples at Vṛddhācalam and Tiruvaṇṇāmalai, the first of these three being more widely known than the latter two. I have seen and examined the Chidambaram series in situ often and the Tanjore series also more than once. Recently I had also been twice to Kumbhakonam and once to Vṛddhācalam and spent a considerable time examining the representations on the towers there. The Kumbhakonam series does not give the descriptive verse for each, but it affords great help by giving the title and number of each, although this number and title label are obliterated in several cases or thickly overlaid with lime-coating. A comparative study of these representations of Karaṇas in sculpture among themselves and then vis-a-vis the textual descriptions in Bharata, Abhinavagupta, Kīrtidhara and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu, as also in the later writers like Jāya, reveal very interesting data on the nature and identity of particular Karaṇas.

In Western India, some examples of Jain miniature painting have been discovered which depict dance-poses, and as already mentioned, in the very region where the Nṛttaratnāvalī was written, fine large-size bracket-figures, depicting dance-poses are available. To these and others, I shall come in the end.

As already pointed out, the Tanjore series is incomplete. On the first fioor of the big central tower of the Bṛhadīśvara temple, a little above the floor-level, the carving of all the 108 Karaṇas had been planned, accommodating normally two in each block of stone and occasionally one on each smaller block. 81 poses on these stone-pieces had been carved, the last one not fully finished and the stones for the rest being left blank. While in Chidambaram, the Karaṇas are shown through a woman-dancer, the Tanjore-panels use Śiva Himself, attended occasionally by a Gaṇa to fill in a gap; for the 61st Karaṇa which is particularly best depicted by a lady, and possibly for 72nd also, a lady, possibly Pārvatī, is shown. Because of Śiva being used here, the figures have been given four hands and as a rule only two hands show the pose required for the Karaṇa, the other two holding some weapon or emblem of Śiva. The theory that the artist has here exploited Śiva's four arms to bring out the dynamic aspect of at least the arms in motion is not justified. The artist has shown the movements here, especially of the leg, in a more natural manner: this is best illustrated by the Karaṇas featuring the Vṛścika leg which is swung up far more in the corresponding Chidambaram pieces. Generally speaking, there is evident a sense of greater dynamism in the Tanjore figures. Although the Tanjore series lacks the name-labels or verses, they being in the regular order of enumeration given by Bharata, which it has not been fortunately possible to dislocate, is itself an unfailing help in knowing the identity of each.

If the Tanjore series is incomplete, the Chidambaram one is not only complete, but is repeated in more than one place on the towers of the Śrī Naṭarāja temple, in a systamatic series as well as separately; and as already noted, the descriptive verse of Bharata on each Karaṇa is also given in the main complete series on the Eastern and Western Gopuras. Though all the 108 Karaṇas are shown, actually only 93 are clear, the rest having become damaged; and the inscriptions also, in a few cases, had strayed away from the sculptures. But there is the advantage of using together, for cross-checking, the two series in the two above-mentioned Gopuras.

Chronologically, the Tanjore sculptures are earlier, having been generally taken as contemporaneous with the building of the Temple by Rājarāja Cola, the Great (A.D. 985-1014). The Chidambaram sculptures belong to the time of Kopperuñciṅga (13th century) but owing to the renovation-work in the 18th century, certain dislocations and wrong fixings had occurred. The planned illustrative Karaṇa series on the Gopuras are not the only dance-scultpures in this temple of the Lord of Dance: the corridor round the main Naṭarāja-shrine, (Naṭana-sabhā), the basements of several Maṇḍapas, the corridor round the Devī-shrine, the thousand-pillared hall[1], all these offer a vast number of dance-illustrations on stone.

The Śārṅgapāṇi temple series at Kumbhakonam appears to be of about the same time as the Chidambaram series and the Vṛddhācalam series is Vijayanagar work, copied from nearby Chidambaram.

For the detailed analyses of individual Karaṇas that follow, reference may be made, for the Chidambaram illustrations, to Nāṭya Śāstra, GOS. Vol. I, original and revised editions, and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa[2]. There is some improvement in the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa over the woodcut-copies of the Karaṇas reproduced originally in the Madras Epigraphical Report of 1914 and the illustrations used in N. Ś. GOS. I, first edn. In the second edn. of N. Ś. GOS. I, while there is sometimes the substitution by a correct piece of one wrongly given formerly, there are still several mistakes. A common handicap of the compilers and editors of these volumes has been a lack of substantial knowledge of the subject, of touch with the traditions of the art and of the instinct for or sense of what is what in this Śāstra. We shall come to the causes for confusion as well as the clues for proper identification or reconstruction after a detailed review of the Karaṇas in the texts and sculptures.

The Tanjore series is unfortunately not yet published. I have used a set of photographs of the 81 poses available, kindly given to me by the Archaeological Department of the Government of India and my own repeated examination of this series in situ.

For Kumbhakonam also I have used the photographs so far taken by the Archaeological Department[1] supplemented by my personal examination of the sculptures. There is no basis for the assumption that this series depicts Viṣṇu doing the Karaṇas. Obviously, the Śārṅgapāṇi or Āravamuda Viṣṇu shrine and the adjacent Someśvara Śiva shrine on its south were originally one temple; there is a Śaiva inscription on the present Śārṅgapāṇi tower. Subsequent to their original discovery, the precious fact that at the foot of each piece, the number and name of each Karaṇa are given was found out by scraping the lime-coating on some of them. The discord between these number-name labels and the actual poses in some cases proves that there has been dislocation of pieces caused by repair in this tower too; also the presence of the number of each Karaṇa shows that originally the pieces were in the order in Bharata, which has not been now preserved. As already observed, these sculptures belong probably to the same time as those of Chidambaram, although from an inscription of Rājarāja I,

1. The Kumbhakonam series was first brought to the knowledge of the public sometime back by Sri T. S. Aravamuda Iyengar, Advocate, a local enthusiast and the local Tamil monthly, Cauvery, now defunct, which reproduced 29 of these pieces at random. My first study based on the latter and a personal visit to the place was supplemented by a further visit, a fuller set of photographs by the Department for which I must thank Dr. R. Subrahmanyam and rough sketches of a large number of them by my son R. Charudattan.

now on a pillar in the Śiva shrine, we have to take the whole original structure to be much earlier. On the whole, only 95 Karaṇa-illustrations could be found in this series. On the East face, at the south end, a modern structure has been put up in which 13 pieces are completely covered up; in the further part of the East face of the tower we have pieces numbering 14-34; on the North face, there are only 9 pieces, confined to the eastern side, the western half being barren. On the Southern face, the pieces are in two sections; one outside the parapet wall, the eastern half, to be approached through the modern building, which has 4 pieces together with the figure of Kālī in dance; the other inside the wall to be approached through the temple, where there are 10, the 9th buried, the 10th partly so. On the West face, inside the temple, the south side has 18 and the north 20 (19-38). On the East face, north side, there is a figure of Ūrdhvatāṇḍava Naṭarāja (32nd panel), which is in addition to the illustrative piece of Lalāṭa-tilaka Karaṇa; this does not form part of the series and this together with the dancing Kālī on the east side of the South face, should have been a separate representation. This again shows the two facts already noted, the dislocation of the pieces in this series and this series also being Śaivite in character, a fact further strengthened by the presence of a Gaṇa in some of the panels.

The Kumbhakonam figures are, in some instances, more beautiful in execution than those in Tanjore or Chidambaram.

Karaṇas in the Texts and sculptures—A Comparative Study

We shall now examine one by one the Karaṇas on the basis, on the one hand, of Bharata and Abhinavagupta and the divergent conception of some of them according to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu and Kīrtidhara and, on the other, of the sculptural representation of each in Chidambaram, Tanjore and Kumbhakonam. Karaṇas on which no difference is seen among the above-mentioned textual authorities or their sculptural representations, as also one or two of which the exact details cannot be made out, are left out.

Talapuṣpapuṭa (1st) (Jāya 1st)

In the first Karaṇa itself the Chidambaram represention, as given in GOS. I. (both edns.), is defective or at least not sufficiently correct. Following Abhinavagupta, Jāya gives a very detailed description of this (IV. 27-32). The 'Tala' in its name stands for Talasañcara which is the pose of one of the legs here. In Talasañcara-pāda, the heal should be raised (N. Ś. IX. 273) and consequently the hip on this side will be a little tilted up. But in the Chidambaram sculpture, the feet are both evenly flat and even so the hip on either side. On the other hand, in the Tanjore seulptures this Talasañcara-pāda and Vyābhugna-kaṭi are beautifully shown; and it is the Tanjore illustration that is close to Bharata, Abhinavagupta and Jāya. The Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa has selected a Chidambaram piece (fig. 15) which is closer to Talapuṣpaputa. In Kumbhakonam, the Talapuṣpaputa, which is alright, is No. 18, on the south side of the East face of the Gopura.

Varttita (2nd) (Jāya 27th).

The Chidambaram illustration as given in GOS. I. (both edns.), as well as the somewhat closer one given in the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa (fig. 16), are both not quite correct in the representation of the hands which Abhinavagupta, and following him Jāya, say should be released on the thighs. While in the above-mentioned illustrations, the arms are thrown apart from the legs, in the Tanjore illustration the arms are just, as required, on the thighs.

Valitoruka (3rd) (Jāya 105th).

The Chidambaram sculpture GOS. I. (both edns.) and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa seem to have the hands alright, but the legs there are incorrect, not being Valita as stated by Bharata or in accordance with the Baddhā Cārī specified by Jāya. In the Tanjore illustration, the legs are Valita, but the hands are not correct.

Apaviddha (4th) (Jāya 50th).

The Chidambaram piece is in accordance with Bharata and Jāya but the Tanjore one is nowhere near this.

Svastikarecita (7th) (Jāya 71st).

This is an interesting case for comparative study of the texts and the sculptures. The Chidambaram illustration agrees with Bharata, Abhinavagupta and Jāya. But the Tanjore illustration follows another tradition in which the legs are straight and close as in Samanakha, a version of this Karaṇa which Abhinavagupta cites anonymously and refutes. समनखौ पादावनुवर्तेत इत्यसत्।

Nikuṭṭaka (9th) (Jāya 9th)

While Chidambaram and Tanjore agree on this, Kumbhakonam, which bears the number 9 and name Nikuṭṭaka clearly, presents the hands differently ; without both hands being Nikuṭṭaka on shoulder, the left is at chest as in the next Karaṇa, with the right hand gracefully let loose as Dolā.

Ardhanikuṭṭita (10th) (Jāya 107th)

In the Chidambaram and Kumbhakonam sculptures, one of the hands has been brought to the chest but in the Tanjore illustration, both are at the head level as in Nikuṭṭaka. If the name Ardhanikuṭṭaka should have some meaning and that meaning is that this is Nikuṭṭaka in some limbs (ardha), it will be hard to justify the Tanjore piece.

Kaṭicchinna (11th) (Jāya 7th)

The Chidambaram sculpture as given in GOS. I. (both edns.) and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa does not have the hands in the required pose ; it is in the Tanjore piece that the hands are correctly represented on the shoulder. See Tanjore, Dept. Photo. No. 3831, noted as panel II which is really panel II ; No. 3832, marked panel 11 is really 12 and 13, and 13 is repeated In the photograph 3833. In the temple itself, these are correctly noted.

Pṛṣṭhasvastika (16th) (Jāya 26th).

The Chidambaram piece as reproduced in the three publications, as also the one at Kumbhakonam where the name-label is clear, answers to the description of this in Bharata. But a multiplicity of interpretations of this Karaṇa and its name is seen in the Abhinavabhāratī and Jāya. Jāya who devotes six verses to it speaks in detail of Kīrtidhara's conception of it ; here, after turning back, the dancer faces back the audience and one hand is to be on the chest. It is interesting to note that it is this Kīrtidhara-version that is found in the Tanjore Pṛṣṭhasvastika. The numbering of this Karaṇa in Kumbhakonam, which seems to be 22, is however puzzling.

Akṣiptarecita (20th) (Jāya 57th)

According to Bharata's own brief description, the left palm is to be a tthe chest and the right is to be swung up. As explained by Abhinavagupta, the two legs are to be in two different ways, Añcita and Sūcī. The Chidambaram piece in all the three publications has neither the hands nor legs to answer to this. But one can see these poses of hands and legs in the Tanjore representation.

Vikṣiptākṣiptaka (21st) (Jāya 63rd)

The description in Bharata, despite Abhinavagupta and Jāya, does not give a picture of this. The illustrations for this in Chidambaram and Tanjore differ from each other, in hands as well as feet.

Ardhasvastika (22nd) (Jāya 24th)

Bharata's description of this (IV. 83) requires the right hand to be stretched as Kari-hasta and left to be at the chest. But in the sculpture in Chidambaram the right hand is near the hip, i.e. in Kaṭi-hasta. In his commentary, Abhinavagupta points out that in the place of Kari-hasta, some read Kaṭi-hasta and Jāya on this Karaṇa (p. 112) says more elaborately and specifically that Kaṭi-hasta is given by Kīrtidhara, Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu and their followers. In the Tanjore sculpture, the Kaṭi-hasta is seen on the right hand. From this, it is clear that the sculptures of Chidambaram and Tanjore are both after the Kīrtidhara-Taṇḍu tradition.

Añcita (23rd) (Jāya 5th)

In Bharata, this follows Ardhasvastika, and the only change Bharata mentions is that the hand, viz. the Kari-hasta i.e. on the right, as interpreted by Abhinavagupta, should be tossed up to the level of and in front of the nose. The Chidambaram Añcita does not accord with this : While it has Svastika-pādas, it has the right hand in Kari-hasta and not in front of the nose; even if we take that the sculpture took the Añcita-action for the left hand, even then it is not before the nose, but is in Patāka, as in Abhaya, at the chest. The Tanjore sculpture on the other hand answers correctly to Añcita as described by all the authorities, Svastika-legs, right hand in Kaṭi and left at nose, the only difference being that while Abhinavagupta interprets the nose-ward lifted hand as the right, the Tanjore figure takes this for the left hand. Bharata is of course not clear on this, but either hand would be equally natural for the applications given for this Karaṇa.

Nikuṭṭaka (9th) (Jāya 9th)

While Chidambaram and Tanjore agree on this, Kumbhakonam, which bears the number 9 and name Nikuṭṭaka clearly, presents the hands differently ; without both hands being Nikuṭṭaka on shoulder, the left is at chest as in the next Karaṇa, with the right hand gracefully let loose as Dolā.

Ardhanikuṭṭita (10th) (Jāya 107th)

In the Chidambaram and Kumbhakonam sculptures, one of the hands has been brought to the chest but in the Tanjore illustration, both are at the head level as in Nikuṭṭaka. If the name Ardhanikuṭṭaka should have some meaning and that meaning is that this is Nikuṭṭaka in some limbs (ardha), it will be hard to justify the Tanjore piece.

Kaṭicchinna (11th) (Jāya 7th)

The Chidambaram sculpture as given in GOS. I. (both edns.) and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa does not have the hands in the required pose ; it is in the Tanjore piece that the hands are correctly represented on the shoulder. See Tanjore, Dept. Photo. No. 3831, noted as panel II which is really panel II ; No. 3832, marked panel 11 is really 12 and 13, and 13 is repeated In the photograph 3833. In the temple itself, these are correctly noted.

Pṛṣṭhasvastika (16th) (Jāya 26th).

The Chidambaram piece as reproduced in the three publications, as also the one at Kumbhakonam where the name-label is clear, answers to the description of this in Bharata. But a multiplicity of interpretations of this Karaṇa and its name is seen in the Abhinavabhāratī and Jāya. Jāya who devotes six verses to it speaks in detail of Kīrtidhara's conception of it ; here, after turning back, the dancer faces back the audience and one hand is to be on the chest. It is interesting to note that it is this Kīrtidhara-version that is found in the Tanjore Pṛṣṭhasvastika. The numbering of this Karaṇa in Kumbhakonam, which seems to be 22, is however puzzling.

Akṣiptarecita (20th) (Jāya 57th)

According to Bharata's own brief description, the left palm is to be a tthe chest and the right is to be swung up. As explained by Abhinavagupta, the two legs are to be in two different ways, Añcita and Sūcī. The Chidambaram piece in all the three publications has neither the hands nor legs to answer to this. But one can see these poses of hands and legs in the Tanjore representation.

Vikṣiptākṣiptaka (21st) (Jāya 63rd)

The description in Bharata, despite Abhinavagupta and Jāya, does not give a picture of this. The illustrations for this in Chidambaram and Tanjore differ from each other, in hands as well as feet.

Ardhasvastika (22nd) (Jāya 24th)

Bharata's description of this (IV. 83) requires the right hand to be stretched as Kari-hasta and left to be at the chest. But in the sculpture in Chidambaram the right hand is near the hip, i.e. in Kaṭi-hasta. In his commentary, Abhinavagupta points out that in the place of Kari-hasta, some read Kaṭi-hasta and Jāya on this Karaṇa (p. 112) says more elaborately and specifically that Kaṭi-hasta is given by Kīrtidhara, Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu and their followers. In the Tanjore sculpture, the Kaṭi-hasta is seen on the right hand. From this, it is clear that the sculptures of Chidambaram and Tanjore are both after the Kīrtidhara-Taṇḍu tradition.

Añcita (23rd) (Jāya 5th)

In Bharata, this follows Ardhasvastika, and the only change Bharata mentions is that the hand, viz. the Kari-hasta i.e. on the right, as interpreted by Abhinavagupta, should be tossed up to the level of and in front of the nose. The Chidambaram Añcita does not accord with this: While it has Svastika-pādas, it has the right hand in Kari-hasta and not in front of the nose; even if we take that the sculpture took the Añcita-action for the left hand, even then it is not before the nose, but is in Patāka, as in Abhaya, at the chest. The Tanjore sculpture on the other hand answers correctly to Añcita as described by all the authorities, Svastika-legs, right hand in Kaṭi and left at nose, the only difference being that while Abhinavagupta interprets the nose-ward lifted hand as the right, the Tanjore figure takes this for the left hand. Bharata is of course not clear on this, but either hand would be equally natural for the applications given for this Karaṇa.

There are two points in Jāya's treatment of Añcita which may be mentioned. Añcita which is the distinguishing action giving the name to the Karaṇa is taken by Abhinavagupta with the hand whereas Jāya takes it with the leg. The latter is not understandable as the Svastika on the leg continues here from the Ardhasvastika. Probably we could emend Jāya's text here (p. 106, l. 3) into अञ्चितोऽङ्घ्र्यनुसारी, allowing Añcita to go with the hand, but then we have the problem of explaining why the leg, aṅghri, is mentioned at all by Jāya. Secondly, among the uses of the Añcita, Jāya gives Nirvarṇana or looking attentively; this is missing in Śāṙgadeva; in Abhi. Bhā. I., first edn, this reads as Nirvāṇa, blissful feeling, but this is omitted in the second edition. However, both Nirvāṇa and Nirvarṇana could be justified, though obviously only one of them could be the correct reading.

Bhujaṅgatrāsita (24th) (Jāya 69th).

The description of this in Bharata and the explanation in Abhinavagupta are clear. Jāya's description is also clear. It is the Chidambaram illustration which is close to this description. In Tanjore, both right leg and the hands are in a different pose, the former being in the well-known pose of the Naṭarāja image. The Kumbhakonam representation (No 24, East face, right side) agrees with that in Tanjore. Jāya does not record any variant form of this to throw light on the Tanjore representation; but in two subsequent instances where Bhujaṅgatrāsita forms part of the Karaṇa, viz. Bhujaṅgatrastarecita and Bhujaṅgāñcita, it is the common Naṭarāja form of leg that is given in Chidambaram too.

Ūrdhvajānu (25th) (Jāya 38th)

The hands of this Karaṇa are correctly shown only in the Tanjore sculpture: the legs alone are in proper position in the Chidambaram piece. The Kumbhakonam figure (No. 7, West face south side) is more after that in Chidambaram.

Nikuñcita (26th) (Jāya 43rd)

This is a Karaṇa about whose hands divergent views are recorded by Abhinavagupta and Jāya. But the pose of the right hand as seen in the Chidambaram piece, i.e. Kari-hasta. is not given by any of the authorities. On the other hand, the hands in the Tanjore carving are correct. The Kumbhakonam illustration (No. 34 West face, north side) shows the Vṛścika legs in the Chidambaram form and the hands in the Tanjore form.

Mattalli (27th) (Jāya 33rd)

Neither the pādas nor the hastas are according to the description in the Chidambaram sculpture; they are correctly done in the Tanjore piece; in fact, the Mattalli as representing the gait and motion of a drunkard is beautifully shown by the latter sculpture.

Recitanikuṭṭita (29th) (Jāya 94th)

Valita (31st) (Jāya 11th)

The essential thing in this which gives it the name is the turn of the hips; a second important feature is that the right hand is to be stretched up afar from the body. These features are correctly and clearly shown in the Tanjore sculpture.

Ghūrṇita (32nd) (Jāya 131st)

According to the vulgate version, the legs here form a Svastika and then move aside, but according to Kīrtidhara as recorded by Jāya, the Svastika of the legs preceded by a jump is the important feature of this Karaṇa. It may be seen that the former version is followed by Chidambaram, the latter by Tanjore.

Lalita (33rd) (Jāya 10th).

This is correctly shown in the Chidambaram sculpture. The Tanjore piece does not have the Kari-hasta on the left, while its right hand too is not well shown, as in the Chidambaram piece. Actually Kari-hasta is on the right arm in Chidambaram.

Bhujaṅgatrasta-recita (35th) (Jāya 65th)

The Bhujaṅgatrāsita legs with both hands stretched out on the left form this Karaṇa. In the Chidambaram illustration, the hands are almost alright, but not the legs; actually here, the left hand, instead of being parallel to the right as required, is taken up higher. The Tanjore piece is completely correct.

Nūpura (36th) (Jāya 100th)

The hands in this are said to be 'Recita-latās' only in the Kīrtidhara-version, according to Jāya ; and it is interesting to note that it is this version that is followed both in Chidambaram and Tanjore.

Vaiśākharecita (37th) (Jāya 80th)

Jāya records that according, to Kīrtidhara, the Sthāna here, contrary to the Karaṇa-name, is Vaiṣṇava. Tanjore shows correct Vaiśākha ; Chidambaram is prone to Vaiṣṇava; also only one hand is Recita in Tanjore, and in Chidambaram neither hand is Recita which again is against the very Karaṇa-name.

Bhramaraka (38th) (Jāya 99th)

Both Chidambaram and Tanjore have the required Svastika on the legs and the implication of a wheeling round at waist, which is the life-movement of the Karaṇa ; but the hands differ in the two.

Catura (39th) (Jāya 84th)

The Chidambaram sculpture shows Kari-hasta on the left hand which is not required at all. The Tanjore piece seems to be closer to the description.

Bhujaṅgāñcita (40th) (Jāya 28th)

The Chidambaram illustration is correct in hands and feet. But in the Tanjore sculpture. the left hand is in Kari-hasta instead of Latā. Kumbhakonam (25th, East face) follows Chidambaram.

Daṇḍarecita (41st) (Jāya 31st)

The Chidambaram illustration accords with the text. In the Tanjore piece, both hands are Recita and a side-view is given of the lower part of the body which however does not show the Daṇḍapāda correctly.

Vṛścikanikuṭṭita (42nd) (Jāya 96th)

There is no difference in the description of this in Bharata, Abhinavagupta and Jāya. The Chidambaram sculpture follows the text closely ; but in the Tanjore piece, the hands are both Patākas on the chest, which is not correct.

Kaṭibhrānta (43rd) (Jāya 45th)

Neither the Chidambaram illustration nor the Tanjore piece, which differ between them widely, answers to the description in the texts which are uniform.

Latāvṛścika (44th) (Jāya 79th)

The depiction of this in Chidambaram and Tanjore are correct. But in Kumbhakonam (No. 3, South face, western side) both the hands are at the chest, without one of them (the left) being Latā, which is wrong. The very name of the Karaṇa means that the leg is in Vṛścika and hand in Latā.

Chinna (45th) (Jāya 3rd)

The texts and Chidambaram agree fully, but in Tanjore, the right hand agrees with the text but not the left hand which is thrown up. In fact, Bharata and Jāya do not specify anything for the left hand ; it is Abhinavagupta who gives Alapadma on the side of Kaṭi for both hands. I think the Chidambaram representation for the left hand is more justifiable.

Vyamsita (48th) (Jāya 91st)

The Chidambaram piece is nearer to the description than the Tanjore one. The legs are alright in Tanjore, but the position of the hands at chest, which Bharata himself mentions, is not seen in that figure, nor does Abhinavagupta or Jāya record any variant version of the Karaṇa to which the Tanjore figure might correspond.

Pārśvanikuṭṭita (49th) (Jāya 39th)

While both Chidambaram and Tanjore answer to the description of the texts, there is yet a difference in the execution between the two, the Tanjore representation appearing better and more exact.

Lalāṭatilaka (50th) (Jāya 52nd)

There is no mistaking this Karaṇa whose name is very clear and which occurs as ūrdhvatāṇḍava in the iconography of Naṭarāja-forms. Texts and sculpture have alright the right Vṛścika leg up, so as to touch the forehead with the toe. But no text speaks here of the position of the hands and Chidambaram and Tanjore therefore use each its own fancy for the position of the hands.

Kranta (51st) (Jāya 2nd)

Both Chidambaram and Tanjore follow the text but while the former seems somewhat literal, the latter seems to understand the dynamics of this Karaṇa better, by catching hold of the action of turning, Parikrama or Vyāvarttita which both Abhinavagupta and Jāya mention; this latter would also answer to the application of Uddhataparikrama, of the moving about of a haughty person.

Kuñcita (52nd) (Jāya 89th)

Bharata's description or that of Abhinavagupta or Jāya of this Karaṇa does not suggest that this involves sitting; the Chidambaram representation is seated, whereas Tanjore gives a standing Karaṇa, which is perhaps closer to the proper form of this.

Cakramaṇḍala (53rd) (Jāya 14th)

This again is shown in Chidambaram as a seated Karaṇa. But in Tanjore it is correctly shown not only as a standing Karaṇa but also as bringing out, by the twist given to the lower half of the body, the wheeling round required by the name (Cakravadbhramaṇa as Jāya says).

Uromaṇḍala (54th) (Jāya 46th)

The Svastika of pādas in the Chidambaram representation (Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa) is the prior moment and so far as the present Karaṇa is concerned, the pādas have to be actually moved apart after the Svastika. The hands are to be at chest-level, giving the Karaṇa its name; for these hands, the Tanjore illustration is nearer than the Chidambaram piece.

Ākṣipta (55th) (Jāya 64th)

The Cārī in this which clinches the legs, is the Ākṣiptā which also gives the name to the Karaṇa. In this Cārī, the legs should be crossed below; this Jaṅghāsvastika, as Bharata calls it (N. Ś. X. 37), is absent from the Chidambaram piece in GOS. I. (both edns.) and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa. GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa at least give a standing pose for this, but unfortunately the GOS. I.

second edn. substitutes a meaningless seated pose for this. The correct illustration for this, with crossed shanks, is given in the Tanjore sculpture.

Talavilāsita (56th) (Jāya 54th)

There is confusion in the texts and sculptures regarding this Karaṇa. The Chidambaram illustration for this is not given in GOS. I, first edn. and in the Tāṇḍavalaksana is given something which is wrong in both hands and legs. The one in GOS. I. second edn. answers to the main title-action of throwing up the leg. In the Tanjore illustration unfortunately, the leg is not lifted at all, nor is the hand in the required position. The Kumbhakonam illustration, (No. 1, East face, southern side) whose name-label is also clear, agrees with the one in GOS. I. second edn. Jāya records three views about the hands, Bharata's, Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu's and Kīrtidhara's. Bharata's words may also be interpreted to accord with Kīrtidhara's view i.e. both the hands bent and lifted up at either side of the head, as in GOS. I. second edn. and Kumbhakonam.

Argala (57th) (Jāya 23rd)

This is a difficult Karaṇa for identification. Its name is after its arms which are stretched across the body like bolts. So far as Chidambaram is concerned, the illustrations in GOS. I, first edn. and the one in the second edn. are both incorrect. What is Argala for the first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is Preṅkholita for the second and what is Argala for the latter is Atikrānta for the former. Tanjore steers clear of this confusion and offers what appears to be correct Argala. Kumbhakonam presents Tanjore Argala but with the label Preṅkholita.

Vikṣipta (58th) (Jāya 30th)

The illustration of this in GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is wrong. This is a dynamic Karaṇa involving the swinging of both hands and feet forward and backward and neither the pose nor repose of the figure in these two books would answer to this Karaṇa. GOS. I. second edn. tries to improve with a more dynamic Karaṇa, but not the correct one. The Tanjore representation seems to be correct, though the leg is caught by the sculptor not during its Vikṣepa but when it touches the ground again.

Āvarta (59th) (Jāya 25th)

The legs agree in both Chidambaram and Tanjore, but as regards the hands, Tanjore appears closer to the text. Jāya records here, in addition, four different views on the poses of the legs and hands.

Dōlāpāda (60th) (Jāya 53rd)

The name is after the Cārī involved. Actually the Chidambaram and Tanjore illustrations show the legs differently, but the difference seems to be due to the two catching the right leg at two different points of the Cārī action, the Tanjore figure at an earlier point when the leg is being swerved from one side to the other and the Chidambaram one at the next moment when the swung leg is brought down on the ground.

Vivṛtta (61st) (Jāya 49th Nivṛtta)

The Vivṛtta is, by the very name, a Karaṇa involving turning round. This is beautifully shown in Tanjore through a female figure. But in Chidambaram, as seen in all the three books, this is shown as a seated pose which is absurd.

Vinivṛtta (62nd) (Jāya 48th)

The name underlines a turning at the hip. While the legs are identical in Chidambaram and Tanjore, with the suggestion of the turning more clear in the former, there is difference between the two in the hands; the Chidambaram hands are closer to the text. This Karaṇa consists mostly of a series of leg and hip movements, the sequence of which cannot however be brought out in the sculpture.

Pārśvakrānta (63rd) (Jāya 40th)

The Chidambaram sculpture seems to be alright. In Tanjore, the right leg is as in the Karaṇas involving Bhujaṅga-trāsita Cārī, i.e. as in Bhujaṅgāñcita and in the well-known Naṭarāja image; how this leg is shown like this in Tanjore is not clear, for the Karaṇa takes its name after the Cārī, which is Pārśvakrāntā.

Niṣumbhita (64th) (Jāya 62nd)

This is an interesting Karaṇa, as it comes out in the comparative study. The Chidambaram piece (Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa) has Vṛścika on the right leg, which Abhinavagupta and following him Jāya, record as an alternate view. On the main view, one leg should be 'Kuñcita' near the heel of another, but Tanjore, which does not take the Vṛścika-version, does not depict this kind of Kuñcita either. The hand should move up to forehead, as if doing a Tilaka, as Bharata himself says, and this is strictly followed in Tanjore. Regarding the hand itself, downward Sūcīmukha is recorded by Jāya as Kīrtidhara's view and this is the hand shown in Chidambaram. This again shows the value of Jāya for identifying or interpreting parts or the whole of some of the Karaṇas in sculpture; for the 'Adhomukha-Sūcīmukha' for hand seen in Chidambaram is not recorded by Abhinavagupta, but noted only by Jāya.

As to the propriety of one or the other form of the leg, we may note the following: 'Vṛścika' is a well-known tossing up of the leg and the term is used by Bharata for specifying the leg in many Karaṇas; if he meant it here also, there is no reason why he should not adopt that simple, exact and expressive term and adopt instead the more vague and expansive words 'pṛṣṭhataḥ kuñcitaḥ pādaḥ'.

However, Abhinavagupta's interpretation of this that one leg should be Kuñcita at the back of another, at the heel, an interpretation followed first by Jāya, does not seem to be warranted. The word 'niśumbh' which gives the Karaṇa-name, means 'heavy treading'[1], and in addition to pointing this out, Abhinavagupta says that this might be used for showing Maheśvara. This 'heavy treading', as if stamping the ground, can be shown in the vulgate way or the Kīrtidhara way. As this Karaṇa relates to walking, Tanjore shows this dynamic aspect by taking the figure in profile and not in front-view; and in walking in this heavy manner, the legs and hands will alternately go up and down; when the hands go up, the Lalāṭa-tilaka by hand, which Bharata mentions, would occur and when they go down Kīrtidhara's Adhomukha-Sūcīmukha would occur. As for Kuñcita and Vṛścika of the legs, the latter is but an accentuation of the former; but such vertical toss-up as in Chidambaram would never occur in this Karaṇa. This detailed examination shows also how variant versions of the Karaṇas grew.

1. Cf. N. Ś. IX. 274, the pāda Agratalasañcara and among its uses Niśumbhana; also Mālatīmādhava, V. 22: सावष्टम्भनिशुम्भसम्भ्रम etc. in the description of Cāmuṇḍā.

Vidyudbhrānta (65th) (Jāya 44th)

This is one of the most dynamic of the Karaṇas, bringing out the Tāṇḍava aspect of the Karaṇas to the full. The expressive name, which is after the Cārī, and the use mentioned by Abhinavagupta clinch its chief feature. The whole Karaṇa and its conception come to life as it were in the Tanjore figure. The Chidambaram illustration (GOS. I. first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa) are wrong; GOS. I. second edn. substitutes here the correct illustration, which the first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa give for Sūcī.

Atikrānta (66th) (Jāya 41st)

The Cārī of this, which lends it the name, is Atikrānta and as Abhinavagupta points out in his commentary on the Cārī, the bent leg is to be lifted and placed again at a little distance ahead, as if avoiding stepping on something in front. While this could not be seen in the Chidambaram piece given in GOS. I. first edn., where the foot is on the side and not in front, it could be seen in the Tanjore piece, where the placing in front is intelligently brought out by showing a side-view of the lower part of the body. The circus-feat of the dancer bending arch-like and resting on her hands and feet, which is given in GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa has nothing to do with Atikrānta. But this bent, arch-like Karaṇa is seen also in Vṛddhācalam and is also to be seen though in a slanting way, in figure 18 on the Kumbhakonam Tower, East face, right side.

Vivartita (67th) (Jāya 93rd)

Between the 61st called Vivṛtta and this, the Vivartita, there is a slight difference; in the former Bharata gives both arms as Recita, whereas here only one is Recita, the other following the leg and hip which execute a turn. In Tanjore, this is well shown; the details which are clear there, but are not stated in the text, are firstly the very difficult feat of the body turning around on the hip, as on an axis, with the upper part of the body facing us and the lower part having the back on us and secondly, the Svastika of the legs. In Vivṛtta, the legs are not in Svastika. Among the Cola frescoes on the western wall of the inner prākāra of the sanctum in the same temple in Tanjore, there is a lady dancer executing this Vivartita; also in Chidambaram temple, there is a separate illustration of this though in a different place.

Gajakrīḍita (68th) (Jāya 83rd)

The title gives clue to the correct understanding of the movements and pose of this Karaṇa. The Dolāpāda Cārī and its lateral swinging, as well as the lateral swinging of Latā on the right hand are important here. The Chidambaram piece in the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa against this is wrong. GOS. I. first edn. has no illustration for this, but in the second edn. the correct sculpture is reproduced. The Tanjore figure is also done for the same textual description, but it has caught the figure at a wrong point of the movement and is also unduly stiff and straightened in the leg.

Talasamsphoṭita (69th) (Jāya 55th)

This is correctly shown, according to the description in Bharata, Abhinavagupta and Jāya, in Chidambaram GOS. I. second edn., as also in Kumbhakonam where the label is also clear. But in GOS. I. first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa, a seated Karaṇa is given for this which is obviously wrong; the correct Chidambaram Talasamsphoṭita is wrongly given in these two last-mentioned books as Daṇḍapāda (82nd). The title-movement of this Karaṇa is the bringing together of the flat palms, as in clapping, which is well depicted in the illustration in GOS. I., second edn. The Tanjore Talasamsphoṭita appears to be more correct in its leg and its Atikrāntā Cārī action followed by a foreceful bringing down of it. The palms are somewhat open in Kumbhakonam, giving wrongly a Talapuṣpaputa appearance.

Gaṇḍasūcī (71st) (Jāya 98th)

The name is expressive but its interpretation varied, as Abhinavagupta's comments show. GOS. I. first edn. has no illustrative figure for this, but the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa and the second edn. give each its own figure from the Chidambaram carvings; neither is close to the textual description, though the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa figure is somewhat nearer to the text. The other one is incorrect in both hand and foot. But the Tanjore sculpture gives the correct depiction of the hand at the cheek and the Sūcīpāda. The alternate interpretations of the hands or the leg going up to the cheek, given by Abhinavagupta are not adopted in the sculptures.

Parivṛtta (72nd) (Jāya 92nd)

The positions of hands and legs in the reconstruction offered in GOS. I. second edn. answer to the description, but the essential feature which gives the Karaṇa its name Parivṛtta is the wheeling round and the body turned round at the hip. This title-feature is absent from Chidambaram but is shown correctly in the Tanjore sculpture. In GOS. I. first edn., it is missing, and in the Tāṇḍava-lakṣana illustration, the hands are not correct.

Pārśvajānu (73rd) (Jāya 77th)

The illustration in GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is absurd, neither the legs nor hand agreeing with the requirements set forth or implied in the name. Bharata's description is clear, albiet its brevity. The substitute illustration provided in GOS. I. second edn. is also wrong, the leg being Ūrdhvajānu and the hands not as required. Pārśvajānu is more correct in the Tanjore figure, although here too, the Kaṭihasta mentioned by Abhinavagupta is wanting. In fact, the legs in Tanjore are more according to the Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu version recorded by Jāya.

Gṛdhrāvalīna (74th) (Jāya 106th)

The Tanjore figure for this is correct. The one given in GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is wrong, but in GOS. I., second edn. the correct one has been restored. It may be noted that in the latter, the leg is too much añcita and it goes against the express mention of Abhinavagupta and Jāya that it should not lose the floor-contact. GOS. I. first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa give this illustration for the very next Karaṇa, Sannata.

Sannata (75th) (Jāya 47th)

In Chidambaram and Tanjore the hands agree; also the Svastika of the legs; but there is a difference regarding the legs, Chidambaram having them in Maṇḍala and Tanjore straight. If we examine more closely, the Karaṇa-name Sannata refers, according to Bharata, to the hands (sannatau ca latā-hastau) and as interpreted by Abhinavagupta, Sannata means Dolā-hastas. But neither does Chidambaram nor Tanjore show the hastas as Dolā; the hands are in a slight Svastika at waist. How does this come about? It is here that Jāya helps us by saying that, according to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu, the hands, like the legs, form a Svastika भट्टतण्डुरिह ब्रूते पादवत् स्वस्तिकौ करौ । IV. 125.

Sūcī (76th) (Jāya 17th)

The figure from Chidambaram given in GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa no doubt give a raised foot but not in the manner required in Sūcī. The figure in GOS. I. second edn. is wrong. Nor is the one in Tanjore satisfactory. In Kumbhakonam, over a faint label which might be read as Sūcī, a reclining figure is shown ; this is obviously a case of dislocation of the sculpture.

The Karaṇa gets its name from the Cārī Sūcī which is its essential feature and in this the leg with bent shank should be lifted in front and brought down in front. Jāya expressly states that the foot, when the leg is brought down towards the ground, should not actually touch the ground (aspṛṣṭabhūḥ puraḥ). But in Bharata, the wording seems to imply floor-contact, though not necessarily. That the foot should not touch the ground is emphasised by Śārṅga-deva also (S.R. VIII. 698, Adyar): पात्यते भूमिमस्पृशन् । The simile of a needle stretched for piercing would also require this stopping before floor-contact.

Sūcīviddha (78th) (Jāya 18th)

The 'Viddha' action of the leg in Sūcī over the other is the feature which marks this off from Sūcī ; but when showing this, the Chidambaram (GOS. I. second edn.) piece and the one at Tanjore make a difference in the shape of the legs, the former one continuing the Maṇḍala from Sūcī and Ardhasūcī, as indeed it appears proper to do, and the latter adopting a straight form for the static left leg and a very slight bend for the right one for the Viddha action. The seated pose given for this Karaṇa in GOS. I. first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is absurd.

Apakrānta (79th) (Jāya 42nd)

Mayūralalita (80th) (Jāya 86th)

This is shown alright in Chidambaram as given in GOS. I second edn. and in Tanjore. In GOS. I. first edn. this is missing; the Chidambaram piece given in the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa with its Ūrdhvajānu seems to be wrong. But in Kumbhakonam, along with the label Mayūralalita, we are given a reclining pose in which the head and fore part of the body and the legs at the end are bent upwards in a curve, attempting apparently a semblance to the peacock's body. This is evidently a parallel to Śakaṭāsya where a popular way of construing the Karaṇa-name has resulted in a different form of the Karaṇa.

Sarpita (81st) (Jāya 75th)

This is the last illustration available in the Tanjore series, and is correctly shown in Tanjore and also in Chidambaram as reproduced in GOS. I. second edn. It is wrong in GOS. I. first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa.

Daṇḍapāda (82nd) (Jāya 67th)

The illustrative Chidambaram piece for this in GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa cannot be accepted, as this figure does not show the Daṇḍapāda; in fact, this is Talasamsphoṭita. The Nūpurapādikā is the Cārī characterising this Karaṇa but the pose given in the above figure could not form part of it, unless we go to Jāya's text and the Kīrtidhara-view recorded there that the Karaṇa first starts with Janitā, the Bhauma Cārī. But the hands here follow none of the authorities, Bharata or Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu; as in the leg, in one hand also, a stick-like swinging up and down is required. The reconstructed illustration in GOS. I. second edn., modelled on Vidyudbhrānta, is probably nearer. The definition of this Karaṇa is merely a reproduction of the verse on Daṇḍapādā Cārī (N.Ś. X 44); even so in the case of the next Karaṇa. Hariṇapluta (83rd) based on the Cārī of that name.

Preṅkholita (84th) (Jāya 36th)

The confusion about this has already been indicated above under Argala. As the definition clearly states, this involves Dolā-pāda, which has been discussed above (60th). The figure given in GOS. I. both edns. is not correct.

Nitamba (85th) (Jāya 37th)

It must be noted that this Karaṇa takes its name after the Nṛtta-hastas, Nitambau, and consequently the whole sequence of the movement, of the hands up to the head and their gradual falling down, through the shoulders, and finally hanging down on either side of the hips, has to be shown. In a sculpture only one of these could be depicted and it is but proper that the final hanging position of the arms on either side, which gives them the name Nitamba, should be taken up by the sculptor. In addition to these hands, the Baddhā Cārī involving a leg-svastika characterises this Karaṇa. Both these are correctly shown in the figure given in GOS I. second edn. The Nitamba-illustration given in GOS. I. first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is really Sannata (75th) already explained.

Skhalita (86th) (Jāya 132nd)

As in Preṅkholita (84th), here too Dolāpāda must be shown. The Chidambaram illustration repeated in the three books is therefore unsatisfactory. This is a Karaṇa for walking in drunken and similar states involving skhalita, haltings and forward and backward steppings, with hands stretched and moved forwards and backwards along with the legs.

Karihasta (87th) (Jāya 103rd)

This is one of the Karaṇas named after the hands and is correctly portrayed in Chidambaram. Among famous sculptures of dancing Śiva, the one in Ellora represents this Karaṇa.

Prasarpita (88th) (Jāya 104th)

This takes its name after the movement of the feet, alternately moving one after the other, scratching the ground, as an intoxicated or a very aged man would do when walking The Chidambaram illustrations offered in GOS. I. second edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa are unsatisfactory. It is not known why the legs should be in Maṇḍala as shown in the above-mentioned illustrations; Bharata, Abhinavagupta and Jāya are silent on this, but the Sarpita or walk with the soles rubbing the floor, would suggest straight legs.[1] I think this illustration would answer to Janita (94th).

1. Regarding Jāya's text here, p. 135, line 2 देवदत्तनिरूपणे, with query and the footnote to this, I now think that देवदत्त should be reconstructed as देवमत्त. Cf. S.R. VII. 709 where मत्त is given as the use of this.

Siṁhavikrīḍita (89th) (Jāya 88th)

In this, as the name signifies, the action of a lion's paw stretched and executing a quick circular movement and forcefully coming down on something in front is to be shown. Such a thing cannot be seen in the Chidambaram illustrations in the three books. Bharata leaves the hands undefined but Jāya specifies them as Ūrṇanābha, which would of course show a beast of prey.

Simhākarṣita (90th) (Jāya 74th)

Here again the name and the prayoga given that this Karaṇa is used for depicting wild animals like lion and tiger should have given some guidance in identifing the sculpture. In addition to this, the description is also sufficiently clear. The illustrative figure offered in GOS. I, first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is nowhere near this Karaṇa, either in legs, which should alternately show Vṛścika, or in hands which should cross (Svastika) at wrist and with downward palms in Padmakośa or Ūrṇanābha. Jāya gives (p. 127, śl. 177) two variant versions of the Cārī here being either Syanditā or Nūpurupādikā, and the hands Makara in both versions. The Chidambaram sculpture given in GOS. I. first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa does not answer to the Kīrtidhara-Taṇḍu versions either. The wrong insertion of a new piece in GOS. I. second edn. has probably been due to the Vṛścika-pāda available in it.

Udvṛtta (91st) (Jāya 60th)

The Karaṇa is obviously named after the Udvṛttā Cārī, but as in the first half of the verse on it, Bharata speaks of the 'ākṣepa' of hands, body and legs, Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu, as noted by Jāya, gives Ākṣiptā as the Cārī. Though the actual figuring out of this Karaṇa is difficult, the Chidambaram illustration given in GOS. I. second edn. seems to represent it, but not the one in the first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa.

Upasṛtaka (92nd) (Jāya 59th)

This again has a significant name, and its meaning viz. approaching slowly in humility or fear, proceeding step by step, the feet crossing at the knees, gives a concrete picture of it. The Ākṣiptā Cārī, Abhinavagupta's explanation and Jāya's further elucidation make the Karaṇa quite clear.

Bharata says generally of the body here as 'ānata', bent; a forward bend of the body is quite natural to the upasṛta gait; but Abhinavagupta, whom Śārṅgadeva and Jāya follow, intereprets this 'ānata' of the body as a bend on the right side and adds that the hand on that side, the right, should be arāla.

Jāya adds here the variant version of this Karaṇa according to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu and Kīrtidhara, according to which the steppings of the feet may be in straight, forward progression, instead of with intertwined legs, and the hands should be dolā. This too is natural.

From all this it could be seen that the Chidambaram illustration in the three books does not represent this.

Talasaṅghaṭṭita (93rd) (Jāya 97th)

Its illustration offered in the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa and GOS. I. second edn. is not convincing. The Vaiṣṇavasthāna required for this is not there. This is missing in GOS. I. first edn.

Janita (94th) (Jāya 58th)

The Karaṇa is named after the Cārī and its definition is practically the same as that of the latter. The correct illustration for this is what is given in GOS. I. second edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa for Prasarpita. The one given for Janita in GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is wrong.

Nivesa (96th) (Jāya 15th)

This is shown as a seated Karaṇa in Chidambaram (GOS. I. first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa) which is wrong. It is deścribed as a standing Karaṇa, with legs in Maṇḍala.

Elakākrīḍita (97th) (Jāya 72nd).

The chief element which gives this Karaṇa its name is the Cārī or leg-movement called Elakākrīḍita, meaning the jump or frolic of the goat or kid; lifting and bringing down of the legs alternately, together with forward bend and turn of the body, is the chief feature. The sculptures given for this from Chidambaram in GOS. I. first and second edns. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa are three different things and yet none of them answers to Elakākrīḍita.

Ūrūdvṛtta (98th) (Jāya 95th)

This again is based on the Cārī of that name but it is difficult to figure it out. The GOS. I. both edns. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa give three different figures for this, none of which however, answers to this. The one in GOS. I. second edn. seems to be the nearest so far as the legs and the right hand are concerned. A slight turn at the thigh and a rather straight body would be needed for this, which are absent here.

Madaskhalita (99th) (Jāya 34th)

This is a name after the effect and gives some clue to the movement involved. The description is also clear, with dangling hands, head swung this side and that, and bent legs intertwined in Svastika and released alternately. The Chidambaram illustration in GOS. I. first edn. and Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is beautiful but not a representation of this Karaṇa, the Vṛścika on the left and the forward right one producing the effect of running not belonging to this Karaṇa.

Viṣṇukrānta (100th) (Jāya 70th)

The sculpture of this given in GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa is correct. The one substituted here in GOS. I. second edn. is absurd. The very name of the Karaṇa provides a guide to understand it.

Sambhrānta (101st) (Jāya 73rd)

This again is named after the effect or use. The Cārī being Āviddha, Svastika of legs is involved ; also one hand is to go behind. These are not brought out in the Chibambaram figures offered in the three books.

Viṣkambha (102nd) (Jāya 29th)

This is a Karaṇa difficult to figure out and its name, whose meaning is vague, is also of little help. The figure given in GOS. I. second edn. seems to answer to the requirements of the hands, which are to be at chest, and the leg which is to be Nikuṭṭita. Of course, the Sūcī Cārī could not be properly shown in a sculpture.

Udghaṭṭita (103rd) (Jāya 8th)

This takes its name after the basic leg-pose of Udghaṭṭita, in which the pādas rest on the fingers and the heels are raised, and then the latter are brought down to strike the ground. The palms are to strike each other flatly as when keeping a tāla and the sides of the body are to be alternately lowered. The use is situations of delight In the two Chidambaram figures offered in the three books, the hands are not in the required form.

Vṛṣabhakrīḍita (105th) (Jāya 102nd)

The name is clear, although the specific and intended action of the animal is not clear. But the Cārī given by Bharata viz. Alātā and the hand action clarify it to some extent. The hands are particularly required to be bent and placed on top of the shoulders. The two Chidambaram figures offered in the three publications do not answer to this Karaṇa.

Lolita (105th) (Jāya 35th)

The name is after the head action. The legs are to be in Vaiṣṇava-sthāna. The two Chidambaram figures in the three publications answer neither to the legs nor to the hands. Jāya records that Alātā Cārī is to be done here according to Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu, but even this cannot be associated with legs as seen in the Chidambaram figures mentioned above.

Nāgāpasarpita (106th) (Jāya 76th)

Here, as the name underlines, the essential feature is the serpentine movement of legs twining in Svastika and separating, and the application for this is the gait of a fully drunken person. Certainly the Chidambaram piece as it is given GOS. I. first edn. and the Tāṇḍavalakṣaṇa do not answer to this. What is given as Nāgāpasarpita in GOS. I. second edn. is just nonsense.

Śakaṭāsya (107th) (Jāya 6th)

This the penultimate Karaṇa is a typical example of how a variant version of a Karaṇa developed by a different and more popular understanding of the Karaṇa's name. The Śakaṭāsya is so called after the Cārī of that name involved in it. This Cārī is very clearly described (N.Ś. X. 16 and Jāya pp. 71-2). Abhinavagupta also clearly gives the derivation as the act of kicking the wheel, शकटस्य असनं क्षेपः, an act in which the body above is lowered for working up the tension and one leg is stretched for the kick. It is a standing pose and its nature as given above is also clinched by the application given, namely the sports of boys.

The above description is first reproduced by Jāya (p. 106, śls. 42-3) but then he adds that, according to Kīrtidhara however, the Śakaṭāsya means having the form of a wheel (probably Śakaṭasya āsya, meaning face of the wheel), the feet being held by the hands, both being up, and giving a rolling, a swinging up and down, on the abdomen and chest. Now if we look at the Chidambaram representation, it is this latter Kīrtidhara version of Śakaṭāsya that is represented there.

Gaṅgāvataraṇa (108th) (Jāya 108th)

The depiction of this, the last Karaṇa, in Chidambaram is in accordance with Bharata and other textual authorities. In Tanjore, this is among the last twenty-seven not carved. It is found in the Kumbhakonam and Vṛddhācalam series, and in the former with the name-label. Instead of resting on the palms as is properly shown in Chidambaram, the downward body is more comfortably rested on the whole fore-arms in Chidambaram; and in Vṛddhācalam, the legs instead of being vertical are given flexion so as to make the whole pose look like a design.

The analysis given above brings out the following important points; the Tanjore representations are almost of the same time as that of Abhinavagupta's commentary on the Nāṭya Śāstra. Rājarāja (A.D. 985-1016) began the Big Temple in 1003 and completed it in 1009. Abhinavagupta's literary activities cover the period 993-1015. Therefore the dance-sculptures in the Big Temple at Tanjore form a stone-bhāṣya on the Karaṇas, independent of the Abhinavabhāratī. As we have seen in the above analysis, the Tanjore illustrations show the prevalence of the traditions of Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu and Kīrtidhara, along with that of Bharata. In the practice of the Karaṇas, it is Bharata as modified here and there by Kīrtidhara and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu that one finds in vogue in the South. For identifying these variations as those of Kīrtidhara and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu Jāya's detailed references to their interpretations have been most valuable. Even after allowing for these Kīrtidhara-Taṇḍu variations, there are differences from Bharata which we should suppose were based on actual practice as prevalent in the time and place of those sculptures; for one actually knows from the Rājarāja-inscriptions of the Big Temple that a few hundreds of members of the professional dancing community attached to the Temple, were settled around the Temple by Rājarāja. These variations continued, as the incidence of divergent elements in the Karaṇa-representations continues in the Chidambaram series, which was copied in the Gopuras of other or still later temples. But what is to be specially noted is that the Chidambaram illustrations show a certain extent of admixture of the Deśī-Karaṇas. The foregoing examination of the Karaṇas showed that some of them, illustrated with seated figures in Chidambaram, had no basis in Bharata and were correctly shown with standing figures in Tanjore. In the whole body of the hundred and eight poses as described by Bharata, even as further interpreted by Kīrtidhara and Bhaṭṭa Taṇḍu, there is no seated (upaviṣṭa) Karaṇa. There are five (or six) seated Karaṇas appearing in the Chidambaram series. In addition to the seated ones continuing in Kumbhakonam, we have in the latter series even a lying Karaṇa (śayana). In Jāya, as also in Śārṅgadeva and Pārśvadeva, we have detailed descriptions of the Deśī-varieties of Sthānakas, Karaṇas and Bhramarīs, and several of these Deśī-Sthānakas and Karaṇas involve or end in seated postures (Āsana) and some like Jala-śayana and Matsya-karaṇa are Deśī-Karaṇas consisting of different postures of lying down and movement of the reclining body. The full clean-up and exposure of the name-labels in the Kumbhakonam series may help us to identify the Deśī-Karaṇas that have got into the older Mārga-series.[1]

The above examination has shown more prominently that both at Chidambaram and Kumbhakonam, several of the discrepancies are due to subsequent repairs and consequent displacement of the pieces. It should be possible to re-arrange the whole set of illustrations, with their identities correctly established. Meantime in our analysis above, helped by several significant clues supplied by Jāya, a considerable step has been taken in that direction.

There are in this connection a few more points which we may consider before taking leave of the Karaṇas and their sculptural and pictorial representation :

Firstly, in the Chidambaram temple all over the place, as also in the one at Kumbhakonam, particularly at the base of the sanctum sanctoram of Ārāvamuda, there are numberless representations of feminine dancing figures, of continuous panels interwoven with music accompanists. It is not possible to identify the poses of each figure in these panels. Indeed all over India, temple sculptures include a wealth of dance-representations, some of which, e.g. those of the Hoysala structures and those in Bhubaneswar-temples, are quite famous. In the absence of some external clues, it is not possible to relate them to texts and clinch the fact of their being actual illustrations of some textual material. On a careful examination, it becomes clear that the sculptors had exercised their fancy freely ; while their imagination had no doubt been fed by the practice of the art that they had seen and they might have captured some of the most beautiful poses or the points in the flowing movements witnessed by them, they had not felt constrained to limit themselves only to what was actually obtaining in practice. While parts of the poses, either the disposition of the legs or of the hands, could be severally identified, the whole poses as such would not yield to fixation according to the names and descriptions in textual traditions. When we take into account the total corpus of movements as amplified by the Deśī-Karaṇas, Sthānakas etc., we may be enabled to trace and link more and more of these sculptural illustrations but even then, I think, from what has already been examined, nothing like a systematic illustration of the Deśī-poses had been contemplated by the sculptors, as it had been done for the hundred and eight Mārga-Karaṇas in Tanjore, Chidambaram etc. During the time taken by me to edit Jāya's text and write this Introduction to it, I had visited the Käkatīya ruins in Warangal and Pālampet. There are large size bracket figures of dancers in the Rāmappa temple, a few examples of which are reproduced in this publication. It could be seen, by examining them in the light of the texts and the illustrations relating to the Karaṇas reviewed above, that they do not illustrate the Karaṇas; they are too few to be illustrations of either the Mārga-Karaṇas or of even the Deśī-Karaṇas. Parts of the poses, the legs or the hands, may approximate to those in some Karaṇas but the pose as a whole may not represent any specific Karaṇa. The supposition by historical scholars or some of the more enthusiastic writers on cultural subjects that the Pālampet dance-sculptures illustrate Jāya's Nṛttaratnāvalī lacks foundation.

My attention was drawn to some pictorial dance-illustrations. In the publication Śrī Kālaka-Kathā-saṁgraha[1], there are reproduced from mss., 88 illustrations. Plate XXXII gives two lady figures captioned Tiryagunnata and Skandhonnata; four plates that follow give twelve drawings illustrating Śiro-bhedas (head-movements), called here strangely TĀNAS. Then follow some drawings representing Dṛṣṭi-bhedas (varieties of look). While in the Śiro-bhedas, the figures are in Samapāda, in the Dṛṣṭi-drawings, the hands and legs are in different poses. But these are not illustrations of any of the Karaṇas.

DEŚĪ DANCE IN JĀYA

As already pointed out, the Nṛttaratnavalī (N.R.) is especially noteworthy for its latter part in which several regional forms of dance are described. In the first four chapters, the work deals with the classical forms as handed down from Bharata. In chapter five Jāya says that he would describe the Deśī as prevalent in his time:

महाराजाधिराजेऽस्मिन् गणपत्यवनीश्वरे ।
समुद्रमेखलामेनां बाहुना रक्षति क्षमाम् ॥
या देशी वर्तते लोके सास्माभिः कथ्यते स्फुटम् । V. 11-12.

CHARACTER OF DEŚĪ

The development of dance and different forms and variations of it could be easily understood if we bear in mind the linguistic analogy. After classical Sanskrit, there were the several Prākṛts and when these Prākṛts themselves came to be the media of literary expression, they too became sophisticated and standardised and gave place to the Apabhraṁśa. Even so in dance, after the older modes had been set forth and defined by Bharata and his immediate followers, additional poses and sequences were observed by theorists who began codifying and describing them in their texts : these additional poses, movements and modes themselves became settled as a supplement to the classical repertoire. A great many of them bear Sanskrit names and appear just as a continuation or amplification of the older material :[1] e.g. the Cālakas or Hasta-movements which Śārṅgadeva just mentions under Bāhu and Vartanās and on the numerous varieties of which Kallinātha gives an extensive extract from Kohala. (S. R. IV. p. 111, Adyar) ; all the names here are in Sanskrit and Cālaka itself is only another name for the older one Recaka. In fact Śārṅgadeva gives all Deśī-material, not in a separate section like Jāya, but as additional ones under each of the topics like Cārīs (VII. 907ff), भरताभिमताश्चार्यो द्वात्रिंशन्मिलितास्तु ताः ।

देशीप्रसिद्धाः सन्त्यन्याः ताः संप्रत्यभिदध्महे ॥

Sthānas (S.R. VII. 1094 : 13 Deśī-sthānas), etc.

This newer material attained again country-wide vogue by being incorporated into the older tradition. Further local variations and varieties then came to be observed, recognised and dealt with by the writers and the process thus went on, showing that there was no stagnation, nor failure to get enriched by fresh developments.

We have this subject of Deśī dance dealt with by Someśvara, our writer Jāya, Śārṅgadeva (S.R), Pārśvadeva (S.S.S), and also by several writers who are still later and who draw upon the above authors. Deśī could be dealt with conveniently in two sections : one, the additional poses, movements and sequences under the heads of Sthānakas, Karaṇas, Bhramarīs, Pādas, Pāṭas, Cārīs (ākāśikī and bhaumī), Lāsyāṅgas and Gatis; and two, the several regional dances themselves such as Peraṇī, different Rāsakas, Carcarī, Śivapriya, Cintu, Kanduka, Bhāṇḍika, Cāraṇa, Bahurūpa and Kolhāṭa. We shall deal with these now, collating Jāya's treatment of these with that found in other works.

1. This applies to the history and development of music as well ; see my paper on the Popular and Classical in Music, Journal of the Music Academy, Madras XXVIII, pp. 100-106.

In music, the Deśī-material begins with Mataṅga whose treatise itself is called Bṛhaddeśī; if we recover the full text of Mataṅga's Bṛhaddeśī, we would discover that it is a mine of information on Deśī-dance also. In Kallinātha's commentary on the Saṅgītaratnākara, VII. 350, we have a long extract from Kohala's Saṅgītameru on Cālakas which are a group of composite hand-movments; and here reference is made to a work ascribed to Nārada which, from its name Deśīnṛttasamudra, Ocean of Deśī-dance, appears to contain the largest amount of Deśī-material. No ms. of this work has so far come to light. Among the earliest authorities, we have strictly speaking, to start with Kohala himself for the tracing of the Deśī. Kallinātha says (on S. R. VII. 1017):

एतासां चतुष्पञ्चाशच्चारीणां देशीत्वं भरतानुक्तत्वे सति कोहलाद्यक्तुत्वात् द्रष्टव्यम्।

Kohala's work too is not available; it would therefore be proper or practicable if we start with Someśvara to collect the additional Deśī-material. As already pointed out, much of this is in pure Sanskrit terminology;[1] but as we go later and later, non-Sanskrit names increase. It is therefore at that point that it appears proper to start our notice of the Deśī.

Another point we have to bear in mind in collating Deśī-material, particularly after non-Sanskrit terminology had begun to show itself, is that there is overlapping of the new material, bearing a new name, over what has already been described by Bharata or his immediate successors under an older name. For example, in foot or leg movements : Cārīs are already there in Bharata ; we have then some Deśī Cārīs appearing additionally with pure Sanskrit names ; and then there are numerous varieties of this same foot and leg work found in later treatises under names of doubtful Sanskrit derivation, e.g. Pāṭa-maṇi and Madhupa.

1. Even for the old Nṛtta-hastas and Karaṇas, there grew more popular and sometimes more graphic and expressive Sanskrit names, as shown above in the section on Kīrtidhara. Some of the other popular names are based on pure Sanskrit forms; e.g. Alaga is from Alagna, Vāgada from Vikaṭa, Kaivāra from Kavicāra, etc., At the same time we may note also that in the terminology found in Bharata himself, some of the words are difficult to derive normally; e.g. Aḍḍita and Mattalli (Cārī and Karaṇa), Khaṭakāmukha, Kā(Khā)ngula and Alapadma (Hastas).

लोके मधुपसंज्ञकाः चारीविशेषाः देशीचारीष्वेवान्तर्भूता मन्तव्याः ।
.....पादकुट्टनचारी तु लोके मधुपसंज्ञिका ॥ (Kohala)

Kallinātha on S.R. VII. 1017.

And a further list of Deśī Pādas are given, calling them Cārīs, in which many older Mārga Cārī names appear again.

A complete Mārga-Deśī co-ordintion is to be undertaken to show the actual additions and the cases of overlapping and the same old movements coming up under new Sanskrit or Prākṛt or other local nomenclature. Such a co-ordination would show that it would be difficult to draw a line, in the flowing current of the development of the art, to show where exactly Mārga ends and Deśī begins or to pick out of the mass of movements what exactly is Mārga and what is Deśī. The very conception of Mārga and Deśī would become fluid with a lot of mutual interpenetration and overlapping. The rough and ready definition of Deśī supplied by Kallinātha that it is what Bharata did not speak of, but Kohala and others spoke about, would have to be taken with adjustments in many cases. Comparable to Nārada's definition of Deśī music that Deśī is that which is not governed by country-wide common rules (niyama) but varies from place to place, is paralleled by Pārśvadeva's definitionof Deśī with reference to dance, which, in essence, means the same thing as Nārada's dictum.

देशीनृत्ये तु सार्थत्वं नो विचार्यं विपश्चिता ।

S. S. S., TSS. p. 66. śl. 127.

But as pointed out at the beginning, on the analogy of linguistic development, all this scattered, amorphous Deśī movements slowly gets collected and collated and then fixed and submitted to a grammar. The process is one continuous endless thing like life itself, a gradual reduction of chaos to order and a mutually complementary play of the forces of freedom and discipline.

DEŚĪ ADDITIONS UNDER STHĀNAKAS, KARAṆAS ETC.

The poses and movements associated with Deśī are dealt with under the same head as those of Mārga-dance, the standing leg-poses called Sthānakas, their movements called Cārīs and the joint hand and leg poses involving movement called Karaṇas.

1. Of these we shall first examine the Deśī Sthānakas. Jāya describes 23 of them (pp. 159-163), 21 of which are the same as those given by Someśvara : Samhata, Samapāda, Svastika, Vardhamānaka, Nandyāvarta, Caturaśra, Pārṣṇividdha, Pārṣṇipārśvagata, Ekajānugata, Parāvṛtta, Prṣṭhottānatala, Ekapāda, Brāhma, Vaiṣṇava, Śaiva, Gāruḍa, Vṛṣabhāsana, Samasūcika, Viṣamasūcika and Khaṇḍasūcika एवं स्थानान्येकविंशतिः । The two additional ones in Jāya are Kūrmāsana and Nāgabandha. It is to be noted that Śārṅgadeva has the same 23 as in Jāya, S.R. VII, 1022-26. Pārśvadeva has however some more marked differences in his treatment of the Deśī-Sthānakas in his S S.S. (pp. 66-8). First he states that the Deśī-varieties of Sthānas etc., occur in Deśī dance-forms Peraṇī, Pekkhaṇa, Goṇḍalī and Daṇḍarāsaka. In the Deśī-Sthānakas which he then deals with, he gives only 21 ; Vṛṣabhāsana, Brāhma, Śaiva, Samhata, Prṣṭhottānatala and Ekajānu-6 of Jāya's are missing here, but 4 new ones show themselves up, Tribhaṅgī, Padmāsana, Viṣamapadmāsana and Antarapadmāsana. Besides, there are some minor differences in the names of a few of these, according to the different texts. The 18th in Jāya figures in the enumeration (śl. 15) as Pārśvaviddha but in the actual definition (śl. 34), it is given as Pārṣṇividdha, the name found in Someśvara. As regards the actual definitions of each of the Deśī-Sthānas, Jāya's are mostly after those given by Someśvara.

If we compare these Deśī-Sthānakas with the Sthānakas formerly described under Mārga, we find, that we have some common to both, in which the conception and pose are the same but the description and terminology differ somewhat. Thus Samapāda and Vaiṣṇava are found in both sets. Of the others, some are to be seen in the 108 Karaṇas already described, where Sthānakas are essential parts ; the Deśī-Sthānaka Gāruḍa occurs under the Karaṇa Garuḍapluta ; Svastika, as a Deśī-Sthānaka, refers to the Svastika-formation at the ankle ; Svastikas of legs at different points of the legs occur in several Karaṇas. 'Sūcī' is an element and as applying to Pāda, it is met with more than once under Karaṇas; here under Deśī-Sthānakas, three kinds of stretching of leg-Sūcī are given, Sama-sūcī, Viṣama-sūcī and Khaṇḍa-sūcī. Under Karaṇas, the first one, Talapuṣpapuṭa, is given for the offer of flowers, Puṣpāñjali, but under Deśī-Sthānas a straight and close position of the feet is given for this act, with the new name Samhata; the Samhata-pāda is however the same as the Sama variety under Pāda, the Samapāda, the first, among the Carīs, before the movement starts, and also the leg-position in the Karaṇa Samanakha. The Mārga-Sthāna-kas mention Vaiṣṇava, from which the Śaiva and Brāhma as Deśī-Sthānakas are further elaborations. In the Mārga-varieties of Sthānakas too, a Samapāda is found and it is given by Bharata as presided over by Brahmā; in the Deśī-Sthānakas, a separate Sthā-naka is given for Brahmā with his own name. The Caturaśra as Deśī-Sthānaka merely emphasises an exact measurement or distance between the two feet; but the Mārga-Sthāna Caturaśra is a more comprehensive pose which includes particular positions of chest and hands. Three of these Deśī-Sthānakas refer to poses of sitting, Vṛṣabhāsana, Kūrmāsana and Nāgabandha. Thus the Deśī-Sthānas form a supplement to those given under Mārga, some being further specifications of the elements included in what have already been generally mentioned and some being further elaborations.

2. In the Deśī-varieties of Karaṇas, utpluti or jump forms a common feature and a new element. Someśvara gives only 18 of these, but the main and subsidiary varieties of these given by Jāya are more than those found in Someśvara. A concordance of these as set forth by the different authors is given below :

	Someśvara	Jāya

Thus Someśvara has 18, including the sub-varieties ; of these the definition of Darpasaraṇa is missing in the mss. of Someśvara's work, collated by me; in the enumeration-section, it is found as Daṇḍapraṇata ; Darpasaraṇa is the name found in Jāya, Śārṅgadeva (VII. 752) and Pārśvadeva (p. 70). While Jāya omits Eṇapluta and Tiryakkaraṇa, Śārṅgadeva has them. Nāgabandha is found under both Sthānas and Karaṇas of Deśī.

The Utpluti-karaṇas are dealt with by Śārṅgadeva and Pārśva-deva also; the following table shows the differences among these four:

It may be noted that while the Deśī-bhramarīs are separately noted in Jāya and Pārśvadeva, Śārṅgadeva adds them under Utpluti-Karaṇas which he thus counts as 36 (VII. 775-7).

These Utpluti-Karaṇas fall into four sets: (a) a series of 14 Añcitas, (b) a set of 4 Alagas, (c) a class of 7 Lohaḍīs and (d) a miscellany in which Nāgabandha of the Deśī-Sthānaka appears again, and two (Jalaśayana and Matsyakaraṇa) involve lying down. It may be noted that from here onwards Prākṛt forms of the names occur.

3. Bhramarīs. As in the case of jump or Utpluti, we may say that Deśī dance, as contrasted with the Mārga, has an abundance of wheeling movement or pirouette. In Mārga, we have a very limited amount of Bhramaṇa; it occurs in a few of the 108 Karaṇas and among the Ākāśika Cārīs of Mārga, one is Bhramarī. The varieties of Bhramarī under Deśī given by Jāya are 13. Śārṅgadeva who deals with them as part of the Utpluti-Karaṇas, speaks only of 9. Pārśvadeva (S.S.S., TSS. p. 71) just mentions 5 of them, Chatra, Cakra, Antar, Bahir and Kapāla (i.e. Śiras). Someśvara does not mention them.

The importance of Bhramarī is seen also from what Jāya says of it further, after describing its main varieties (V. 100-106). 8 of them are called 'Kevala' and 5 'mixed'; by further mixing or by the difference in their sequence, 167 varieties are said to be possible; by the variation of 'Alaga' and their sequence, 99 (?) further varieties are also possible. From Śārṅgadeva's brief reference to these further varieties of Bhramarī (VII. 788-9), we have to suppose that, according to some, the Bhramarīs could also be varied by the Karaṇa on which they are done and could thus get further multiplied. Probably, by Karaṇa, Śārṅgadeva means one of the Deśī Karaṇas, Alaga, on the basis of which Jāya works out 99 (?) other varieties.

4. Pādas. The Deśī varieties of the feet or actual foot-work are more confusing than the other Deśī varieties. Diverse nomenclature and overlapping, the same being called by more than one name and appearing under more than one head, mark especially the subject of Deśī Pādas.

First Jāya introduces them as Deśī Pādas, giving 16 of them (VI. 1), as dealt with by Mataṅga. Then 28 of them are described by him as taken from the Deśī-nṛtta-samudra, implying by his words (asmābhir uddhṛtāḥ) that in that work, many more varieties are given; this set of Deśī Pādas is introduced with the name Pāṭa-maṇis :

विचित्राः कतिचित्पाटमणयोऽस्माभिरुद्धृताः ।

Foot or Foot-work takes the form of striking the floor (Tāḍana) and for that reason, it is called Pāda-Kuṭṭana and in a text ascribed to Kohala and quoted by Kallinātha on the SR. (p. 313 ff, Adyar edn. Vol. IV), this is characterised as a Cārī, and given a further popular (loke) name Madhupa.

अथ पादनिकुट्टाख्यचारीणां लक्षणं ब्रूते ।
पादकुट्टनचारी तु लोके मधुपसंज्ञिका ॥
तस्याश्च बहवो भेदाः— ॥

Twenty-five of these Madhupas are then described. Because of this, the foot-varie ties are also dealt with under Cārīs, of the Bhauma and Ākāśika classes; and in fact, Deśī Pādas are dealt with by Śārṅgadeva in the section on Cārī, i.e. Deśī-Cārīs which are given after the Mārga-Cārīs. As feet move along with the rest of the legs, their treatment as Cārī is also justified.

We shall now note the Deśī Pāda varieties given by Jāya under three heads, 16 Deśī Pādas, 28 Pāṭa-maṇis, and 42 Deśī Cārīs with a supplement of 4 additional ones. In the table that follows, a concordance is also provided of the corresponding Deśī Pāda material in Someśvara, Śārṅgadeva and Pārśvadeva.

From the above, it is seen that the first set of 16 Deśī Pādas are not mentioned by Someśvara, but occur in Śārṅgadeva and Pārśvadeva, the former dealing with them under Deśī Cārīs, the latter calling them Pāṭas as well as Cārīs. In two cases, Pārśvadeva gives two more popular alternate names. Pārśvadeva brings all the Deśī Pāda varieties under one head and deals with only 25 of them in all. Of the 28 Pāṭa-maṇis given by Jāya, only four could be traced in Śārṅgadeva and Kallināṭha's quotations on Madhupas and only one occurs among the 25 in Pārśvadeva. The third set given as Deśī Cārīs (Bhauma and Ākāśika) is completely found in Someśvara, except for a slight change in the order and difference in name in three cases. These are to be seen in Śārṇgadeva too, under Deśī Cārīs, except for three. It is interesting to note that Pārśvadeva has only two belonging to this set, but gives 7 new ones not met with in any of the other texts.

Already we referred to the recurrence of old Mārga-names under Deśī-varieties. The last set of Pādas, given as Cārīs, noticed above, contains several examples of this, and it is perhaps because of this that Śārṅgadeva omits a variety like Ūrdhvajānu which comes down from the time of Bharata.

Samanakha, an old Karaṇa and Samapāda, an old Cārī, come up again under the first Deśī Pāda or Cārī called Samanakhā. Vidyudbhrāntā under Deśī Cārī is the same as the Mārga Cārī of that name. Though the words of description differ, Baddhā as a Deśī Cārī does not differ from the same under Mārga Cārī. Even so Bhramarī, Ūrdhvajānu, Alāta and Hariṇapluta, which occur as Cārīs under Deśī as well as Mārga. Some more Deśī Cārīs have the names found among Mārga Cārīs etc. but there is a slight difference in the movement involved, e.g. Sūcī; also the Lalāṭatilaka mentioned by Pārśvadeva. Kariśhasta, among Deśī Cārīs, is an old familiar name, but in content, it is different, applying as it does now not to any pose of the hand, but to an action of the feet!

DEŚI LĀSYA AND ITS AṄGAS

The Deśi features noted above relate to parts and their movements; out of them is formed the full dance, the Deśī Lāsya. Lāsya occurs as a form of stage-entertainment with 10 or 12 items comprised in it, in the text of Bharata himself and successive writers on dramaturgy have mentioned the Lāsyāṅgas while dealing with drama and its different types. Jāya also speaks of this Lāsya at the beginning of his work, I. 57-72. For a detailed discussion on this, those interested may refer to my work, Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa. (1963, Ch. on Bhoja and Nāṭyaśāstra, pp. 574-583).

The Lāsya, in terms of Deśī, was perhaps first dealt with by Bhoja in his work on music and dance. The earliest work we now have which describes Lāsya under Deśī is the SR. In fact, Śārṅga-deva speaks of Lāsya only with Deśī form. But, as I have already pointed out, the first systematic account of the component elements, noteworthy features or highlights of Deśī Lāsya, referred to compendiously as Lāsyāṅgas, was given by Pārśvadeva in his S.S.S. The next important writer to devote special attention to this subject is our author, Jāya. In my paper on Bharata Nāṭya in the Dance Seminar of the Sangeet Natak Akademi, Delhi, I have spotlighted the contribution of Pārśvadeva and Jāya to this and a fuller treatment of it would be proper in this Introduction to Jāya's text.

The following gives at one glance the Deśī Lāsyāṅgas in Jāya, Pārśvadeva and Śārṅgadeva.

Two Lāsyāṇgas of Śārṇgādeva, Sūka and Manas are not found in Jāya. On the other hand, Jāya has several others, giving us thus the fullest list of these. There is a difference between the ten or twelve Lāsyāṅgas coming down from Bharata and these Deśī Lāsyāṅgas. While the former are really themes or sections in a programme of dance, the latter is a composite or omnibus set of features which refer to graces or highlights of Lāsya dance, in all its departments, music, rhythm, instruments, dance, gesticulation, stand, finish, interim pauses, etc. In fact the Deśī Lāsyāṅgas are so much of aesthetics and criticism of the art. Jāya's text is therefore of special importance because of the elaborate attention it devotes to this subject.

Sauṣṭhava, the first, is the fine position, with which the danseuse begins her dance, involving a slight lowering of the body at the hip, Kharvatā, which is of paramount importance as I have shown elsewhere. Sthāpanā is the attractive stand marking the finish of a sequence of dance or gesticulation. Rekhā is best understood by the English equivalent Line, each limb in its proper position and each bend, curve and swerve in its proper degree. Dāla is the first, soft emergence of movement, comparable to the sparkling drop of water moving on a lotus leaf or petal when a light breeze blows. Cāli is the next stage in which, with a gradual acceleration towards medium tempo (madhya-laya) in consonance with the beat of the rhythm, the limbs, feet, hip, thighs and hands, start moving. A further acceleration of the movement into fast tempo (druta-laya) is Cālivali defined by Jāya, first according to Pārśvadeva and then according to Śārṅgadeva ; the former describes it as the glow of joy which permeates the artiste as a result of the perfect harmony with the accompanying music ; the latter describes it more definitely as the graceful movement of the limbs, as well as parts of the face, in perfect accord with the music and its rhythm. As in the case of Cāli, which is from the root Cal, the word Lali is from Lal. Ṭṛkaṇi, which is most probably the same as Tūkali of Pārśvadeva, is the underlining of the tempo, rhythm and beat with the graceful and appropriate movements of the head, corresponding to what we call Aḍḍami of the neck in Bharata Nāṭya parlance. Ullāsa is the suggestive flourish, twice or thrice, of the limbs in a somewhat relaxed state, in unison with the rhythm. Sukalāsa is absent from Pārśvadeva ; Śārṅgadeva mentions Kalāsa itself not here but elsewhere and I have spoken of it in another context.[1]

When in between the different sequences of a course of dance, the capable danseuse effects a unified display of voice, instrument and her own movement, it is called Sukalasa ; it may be taken as an interim crescendo or as corresponding to what we call in the South Indian dance a Tirmāna. Uroṅgaṇa, absent from Pārśvadeva but seen in Śārṅgadeva, is the graceful forward, backward, upward and downward tilt of the shoulders and breasts, alternately, in quick or slow tempo, but in perfect concord with the time-measure ; this may be compared to the lateral movements of the shoulders and arms referred to as Bhujam taṭṭaratu, seen prominently in the opening item Alārippu in the South Indian dance. In the course of the dance, the danseuse, noting the perfect unison of the music of the voice and the instrument and losing herself in its thrill, stands still for a moment, without dancing; this is Bhāva; this follows upon Lali described earlier. The ability of the danseuse to give a quick movement to breasts is Tharahara and the graceful throb that she could give to her breasts or arms or hip, in consonance with the rhythm is Kittu. Deśikāra is the display of different folk-forms, conforming to their respective characteristic manner, but without crudity. The eyes following the hand and brimming with feeling and the hands and limbs keeping perfect lines, and all these done in utter ease is called Nijāpana. We may probably see in this the opening item Alārippu of the South Indian dance, in which, standing in Sauṣṭhava, the danseuse moves laterally her shoulders and hands, with her eyes following them. Dillāyi is the sweet abandon or slackening of the limbs without loss of Sauṣṭhava, appearing as if soaked in the sentiment; as Pārśvadeva clearly puts it, this would apply to repose as well as slow gait. Lavaṇi (Tavaṇi or Navaṇi in Pārśvadeva) is the ability of the body to bend even in movements difficult to execute. Sugītavādyatā, as its plain name means, is dancing in perfect harmony with the music of the voice and instruments. Abhinaya no doubt refers to the showing of the hastas in the interpretation of the meaning of the songs; but what is especially meant here when Abhinaya is mentioned as Lāsyāṅga is that when the movements of larger sweep like Karaṇas and Aṅgahāras are executed, the movements of the limbs in them should be such as to bring out the Bhāva or the idea or feeling intended. Laya is the great mastery of rhythm by virtue of which the danseuse, when dancing in one tempo or measure introduces a second and third variation of it and gets through it all successfully. The natural suppleness of the limbs when the danseuse makes her moves and turns, showing thereby a fullness of feeling, is, as the name signifies, Komalikā. Oyāra, the name of a Lāsyāṅga, is still in common use meaning the heightened bearing of a woman importing a stately grace and attractiveness to her; as a Lāsyāṅga, as described by Śārṅgadeva, it has more or less the significance that is popularly associated with it. But in Jāya, it means the beautiful gait or movement with which the artiste passes on gradually into increasing complexity of the dance. Anīki is the flawlessness of the dance from the point of view of music or rhythm. Aṅgahāra is on a par with the earlier Lāsyāṅgas like Abhinaya and Laya, which have a special meaning as a Lāsyāṅga; it is the facility with which the limbs can, like a bow, bend on either side in perfect keeping with the tempo. Manodharma is still used in music criticism; it is the creative imagination of the artiste which enables her to enlarge the scope of what she had learnt. Aṅga is the full use of all the legitimate elements of Lāsya; Anaṅga is the proper admixture of an extraneous element from Tāṇḍava to add some beauty. Vivartana is the proper display of Karaṇas, Bhramarīs, Cārīs, Pādas and Hastas in proper co-ordination with the rhythmic beats of the instruments. Jhaṅkā is the movement of the dansuese on the right or left, as if giving herself over to the onlooker on that side and then withdrawing herself from that side in a tantalising manner. Mukharasa is a quality imported by make-up as well as the proper attunement of feeling on the face, making it radiant. Ṭheva is the side-long glances of the eyes, overflowing with feeling. Vihasi is the smiling countenance. Dhasaka is the soft and graceful bend forward of the body in the course of the dance, in consonance with Tāla, as a cluster of flowers on a creeper would bend when bees settle down on it. Tala is getting through lightly, Pāṭas or Jatis or Śolkaṭṭus (Bols) which are really difficult, through appropriately devised sequences; Vitala is the opposite where even an easy sequence is done intentionally with an emphasis and made to appear difficult or complicated. Rasavṛtti is the interpretation of Rasa and Bhāva by the danseuse who is immersed in the feeling. Masṛṇata is the underlining of nṛtta-hastas with the appropriate glance in the pleasant mood; it is similar to Nijāpana. Anumāna is the flick of a guess crossing the face of the danseuse and showing itself through the lift of one brow, when in the midst of the dance she is wavering as to what she is to do next in accordanee with the music and the instruments. Pramāṇa is the dance being in perfect accord with the music. Laiighita is the breaking up of the sequence into its parts and getting through each part, with pauses at each section. Aṁśagati is the dwelling for a while on certain elements of importance or beauty. Susandhi is the continuity and flow, avoiding the appearance of any hiatus, when drums are changed or the rhythm passes from one to another. Pādapāṭa is the footwork, done with body kept straight and free from any sympathetic swervings, in which the Tāla-beats are so distinct and articulate that she appears to recite them by mouth. Gatistha is the technique or lakṣaṇa being fully present, whatever the aspect of the dance. Caṇḍana is the last aṅga: it is the ending of a dance and standing still in Sauṣṭhava as if in a picture.

It is interesting to note that, as already mentioned, the Telugu writer Somanātha, of about the same time as Jāya, speaks of some of these Deśī Lāsyāṅgas Mukharasa, Sauṣṭhava, Lali, Bhāva, Dhūkali (the Tūkali of Pārśvadeva), Jhaṅkali, Ṭheva, Vibhrama and Rekhā. See above p 29, Introduction.

DEŚĪ DANCE-FORMS

The Nṛttaratnāvalī is, as already mentioned, noteworthy also for the description of several forms of local dances. I shall deal with them now in detail, comparing Jāya's treatment of these with that of other writers.

Goṇḍalī

The earliest text where we hear of this most important Deśi-form of dance is the thesaurus of King Someśvara of Kalyan, the Mānasollāsa or Abhilaṣitārthacintāmaṇi. In fact, our text expressly mentions the fact that once, at Kalyan, during the Bhutamātṛ-festival, King Someśvara witnessed a huntress (bhillī) sing and dance, and being captivated by her performance, he organised it into a regular dance-sequence which, from that time onwards, has been known as Goṇḍalīvidhi; it has been so named as, in Mahārāṣṭrī Präkṛt, a huntress is known as Goṇḍali.

VII. 161–3, p. 229.

In the S.R., the name of Someśvara or the circumstances narrated by Jāya are not mentioned but in the course of the description of Goṇḍalī, it is more than once said that this dance has its music in Karṇāṭa mode; it may be mentioned here that Someśvara himself speaks more than once of Karṇāṭa as the language of some kinds of songs or music compositions described by him in his

Mānasollāsa. See S.R. VII. 1277, 1279. The make-up of the Goṇḍalī-danseuse is to be in Karṇāṭa-style, says Śārṅgadeva :

गौण्डल्या मण्डलं (नं)[1] प्रोक्तं तज्ज्ञैः कर्णाटदेशजम् ।

VII. 1277.

After giving, as set forth above, the correct explanation and origin of the name Goṇḍalī, Jāya records also a view that takes the name of this dance as Kuṇḍalī and assign a a mythological origin to it. Kuṇḍalī is evidently a wrong Sanskritisation of Goṇḍalī and the legend that Pārvatī taught this dance to a celestial damsel named Kuṇḍalī is due to the forgetting of the real origin as recorded earlier by Jāya. Someśvara wrote in 1131 A.D. and Jāya in 1253-4 A.D. Therefore sufficient time had passed for this dance which had evidently became popular and widespread to have come under the influence of the imagination of certain writers, who, unfamiliar with . its historical and local associations assimilated it into the body of the many dance-forms bearing mythological associations.

तन्नृत्तं कुण्डलीमाहुः तत्सम्बन्धात्पुरातनाः ॥

VII. 163-4, p. 229.

Our work, the N.R., does not separately describe the Goṇḍalī-nṛtya and its music and dance, but from the way the Goṇḍalī is dealt with at the end of the various Deśī dance-forms and under the general description of the Nartakī as such, we are to take that the music and dance which Jāya sets forth under the heading Deśī-paddhati and Puṣpāñjali (pp. 213-4, śls. 69-76) belong to it. It is in the S.R. and the S.S.S. that we have an elaborate description of the method of performing a Goṇḍalī-dance. The latter sets forth the instrumentation and the actual music separately, vādya-pāddhati (p. 73, verses 224-6) and Gīta-paddhati (p. 74. verse 232ff[2]), but it is in the former that a clear and detailed description is to be seen of the 1· Maṇḍala is the wrong reading in the Anandasarama and Adyar editions. Kumbha and the Saṅgītamuktāvalī preserve the correct reading Maṇḍana.

2. मण्डल्या in the T.S.S. edn. here should be गोण्डल्याः method of performing, section by section, the Goṇḍalī. There are more terms of music and instrumentation common to Jāya and Pārśvadeva, but greater details of the songs, Tālas, the tempo, the sections, the dance in each, are found in Śārṅgadeva.

From Kuṇḍalī and the mythological associations with Pārvatī etc., the dance later got further generalised as could be seen from its description in the Saṅgītamuktāvalī which gives here, to set the back-ground, a verse on Kuṇḍalinī Śakti as the life-power in eternal rythmic play in the lotus of the ādhāra or basic pelvic plexus.

शक्तिः कुण्डलिनी विचित्रविभवा सद्रत्नताटङ्किनी
शृङ्गारामृतवर्षिणी सुखमयी लावण्यकल्पार्थिनी ।
आधाराम्बुजकन्दतो(रो ?)द्गतवती लास्यस्वरूपा विधेः
नृत्यन्ती सकलेश्वरी विलसितैः संमोहयन्ती जगत् ॥
अत्र तादृग्गुणवती नर्तकी कुण्डली मता

Thus the Goṇḍalī who became Kuṇḍalī gets further related to the Kuṇḍalinī Śakti, the Principle of Female Power supreme and is expected to be in the image of Goddess Śakti.

The other additional elements in Devaṇa's description are that, after setting forth its original form as Śuddha Goṇḍalī, he gives a mixed or Saṅkīrṇa form in which Karaṇas etc. are introduced according to one's desire. Devaṇa increases also the performers to two or more ; additions may go on in pairs till it becomes a big group performing a complicated group-dance, Saṅkula-nṛtta In the end diverse Piṇḍī-bandhas are also to be added, patterns of circles, squares, lotuses, plaited rows, and rows facing each other. That is, it becomes Lāsya in general.

मुख्या (गुंडली) चैका तथा ज्ञेया सा द्वितीया मनीषिता ।

ततः सङ्कुलनृत्तं तु बहुपात्रप्रकल्पितम् ॥
नृत्तान्ते तच्च कर्तव्यं पिण्डीबन्धैश्च कल्पितैः ।

Then the Saṅgītamuktāvalī gives the Gīta, Vādya, Tāla and Prabandha details of this dance, some of which correspond to those given by Jāya and Pāiśvadeva.

Peraṇī

The Peraṇī, the other important form, is described elaborately in all the three works, N.R., S.R., and S.S.S. While the Goṇḍalī is taken from the hunting folk, the Peraṇī has a Śaivite feligious origin. The name Peraṇī is given also as Prerapī (N.R. VII. 37). By equipment, as well as by dress, the Peraṇī dancer is most striking. While Śārṅgadeva just says that the Peraṇī dancer has a sweet voice, is expert in all the constituents of his dance, is master of rhythm and adept in pleasing the onlookers (about two lines, VII. 1302–3), Jāya who devotes eight lines to his qualities, describes him as a man of attractive personality, of good pedigree, a man of taste, master of music and the instruments, endowed with excellent voice, adept in languages, ready-witted and eloquent, well-grounded in his own dance and its constituents, acquainted with both Tāṇḍava and Lāsya, and one who executes easily the Karaṇas involving jumps and the wheeling movements. As for his dress, he is to be shaven and to have a tuft on top of his head, smeared with holy ash, and decorated with chowries as well as with ornaments of gold and precious stones and having bells all over his legs. In respect of dress too, Jāya's description is fuller: He is to have, in addition, a replica of the serpent's hood over his head (VII. 39); bears in one hand a staff (raṅga-yaṣṭi) and a fly-whisk in the other. Jāya says that before the main Peraṇī dancer enters, four, six or eight associate dancers in the same make-up shall enter, one after the other or in pairs, and these shall stand on all the sides of the main dancer, in the centre (40-41). An interesting detail given by Śārṅgadeva and not found in Jāya's work is that the first person to enter in a performance of Peraṇī is one referred to as Aṭṭa-boḍaka, a Deśī word which, according to Kallinātha the commentator, means one with a completely shaven head.

अट्टबोडक इति सकलशिरोमुण्डिताभिधायी देशीशब्दः ।

He has also dress and ornaments which produce laughter and as the preliminary music is going on, he enters and executes some comic movements. It is when this comic prelude is on, that the main Peraṇī enters.

विशेद्विकृतवाग्वेषभूषो रङ्गेऽट्टबोडकः ॥
तस्मिन्नृत्यति हास्यैकरसे विशति पेरणी ।

VII. 1318-9

The main constituent parts of a Peraṇī-dance are five, referred to by all writers as Pañcāṅgas. They are Nṛtta, Kaivāra, Ghaghara, Vikaṭa and Gīta. These same five, given by Jāya, are also given by Pārśvadeva, with only a minor difference in that the latter gives the fourth, Vikaṭa, in its Prākṛt form Vāgaḍa.[1] The definitions of these in these two texts are almost the same. The S.R. makes a difference by omitting the opening aṅga of Nṛtta, as it is something which goes without saying, and makes up the five of the Pañcāṅgas by splitting the single Vikaṭa of N.R. and S.S.S. into Viṣama and Bhāvāśraya.

1. As noted above on p. 20 of the Introduction, Pālkuruki Somanātha refers to this as Veḍayāṭa.

Nṛtta is the opening dance; Kaivāra which is Prākṛt for Kavicāra, the Sanskrit name given by Śārṅgadeva, is an eulogy on Sabhāpati or the hero whoever he is. The third item called Gharghara-vādya is an elaborate one; the S.S.S. gives a brief definition of it in a single verse but it really comprises seven (according to N.R.) and six (according to S.R.) sections; as I have pointed out in the footnote on p. 209, Vema and Kumbha follow Jāya. These six or seven are different ways of sounding the small bells on the legs of the Peraṇī, a special feature of this dance, with different kinds of foot-beats or without them. While Jāya says that these diverse ways of sounding the ghargharas could be with or without Tāla (p. 209, śl. 46), Śārṅgadeva states expressly that they should all follow the Tāla (VII 1314) which is of course a matter of greater skill and practice. Comic effect is part of this dance. Already we noted that the S R. mentions a preliminary display of comic movements by the Aṭṭa-boḍaka. The fourth Aṅga called Vikaṭa or Vāhaḍa, Jāya and Pārśvadeva say, consists of the putting on of the make-up of monkeys, goblins, etc. and the imitation of their gaits and fantastic grimaces of parts of the face, of the abdomen, of the arms etc.

The last item is the singing of songs, gīta. The S.R. devotes some more attention to this dance and sets forth further details of Rāga, Tāla and kind of instrumentation and order of the dance as intertwined with these (see its Peraṇīpaddhati, VII, 1316-1325). The S.S.S. also gives its own description of the Peraṇīpaddhati (pp. 73-4, śls. 220-222, 227-232).

The Peraṇī is thus, like the Goṇḍalī, a mode that grew up in western India[1] and the Deccan and naturally dance-texts which were written in other parts of India and did not consult works like the N.R. or S.R., properly did not have a correct or complete conception of the Peraṇī. For example, the Sāṅgītadāmodara[2] of Śubhaṅkara, the Saṅgītasārasaṅgraha[3] of Ghanaśyāma and the Nāṭyamanoramā[4] of Raghunātha Rath, all belonging to East India, give an inadequate single-verse description of Peraṇī as a dance full of play of limbs and little abhinaya.

PRENKHAṆA

Preṅkhaṇa is mentioned along with Peraṇa by Jāya and Pārśvadeva, but not by Śārṅgadeva. Pārśvadeva gives Deśī as comprising the four forms Peraṇa, Pekkhaṇa, Guṇḍalī and Daṇḍarāsaka :

पेरणं पेक्खणं चैव गुण्डली दण्डरासकः।
अथैतानि समाश्रित्य वक्ष्यन्ते स्थानकादयः॥

S.S.S. p. 66, śl. 128.

Later, on p. 73, verses 223-4, the order of instrumentation-details are set forth for Pekkhaṇa : Jhaṅkāra, Ghallaṇa, Vādya (?), Kavitā, Antarā and Avajhā-malapa. Jāya's is a slightly more elaborate description (215, śls. 77-9) : Jhankāra with Ālapa and without Tāla, Otā in between Pada and Rūpaka, Kavitā, Avaccheda, Malapa and Praharaṇa. Jāya describes also the general nature of the dance in Pekkhaṇa ; it consists of Utpluti-Karaṇas, Bhramarīs, and Cārīs and Maṇḍalas which are Uddhata. From this, Pekkhaṇa is seen to be a forceful dance specialising in jumps and wheeling movements. But how this dance came to be called Pekkhaṇa, Prekkhaṇa, or Preksaṇa in its Sanskrit form by which also it is referred to by Jāya, where and how it arose, all these details we are not able to gather from the texts. The Saṅgītamuktāvalī of Devaṇa has a description which enlarges its music, theme and its performing personnel to include both men and women.

पेक्खणं तूच्यते नृत्तं गीतशाब्दप्रबन्धजम् ।
नानार्थरससंपन्नैर्नरनारीप्रवर्तितम् ।
विचित्रं च मनोहारि स्वेच्छया कल्पितक्रमम् ॥
P. 10, pt. 2, Tanjore Transcript.

In dancing the above-mentioned forms, Goṇḍalī, Peraṇī and Peṅkhaṇa, Jāya speaks of the different ways or styles, paddhatis, of performing them and the Tāla-variations, instrumentation, sequence and other details characterising each. He first speaks of the Deśī paddhati and then the Sūḍa which itself is of two kinds Śuddha and Sālaga (i.e. Chāyālaga). śls. 75-76, 80-83. Pārśvadeva also speaks of these p. 74, śls. 2340-4.

RĀSAKA

The next form of Deśī dance described by Jāya is Rāsaka (śls. 84-97). This is a group dance of ladies numbering sixteen, twelve or eight, presenting different patterns woven by the members of the group. These patterns are called Piṇḍī-bandhas and these come down from the time of Bharata. In the IVth chapter of the Nāṭya Śāstra, in the description of the Pūrvaraṅga, Bharata deals with the Tāṇḍava and Lāsya which are done to add beauty to it and make it Citra-pūrvaraṅga (śls. 257 ff). The Tāṇḍava consists of the Karaṇas and Aṅga-hāras, already dealt with. Then several Piṇḍīs are set forth by Bharata as reproduced by Nandin and other Gaṇas after seeing Śiva's Tāṇḍava and the delicate (sukumāra) dance (Lāsya) of Pārvatī. The Piṇḍis were intended to represent symbolically different deities, and this representation was done by presenting the pose of the vehicle (Vāhana), or the weapon (Astra) or banner-emblem (Dhvaja) of the deity. For Śiva, the Pindī is Aiśvarī, representing Himself i.e. as Abhinavagupta elucidates, a representation of Śiva-liṅga :

तस्य तादृश एव शिवलिङ्गाकृतिः पिण्डीबन्धः ।

For Nandin, it is Paṭṭasa, the weapon which he holds in his hand, that is shown as the Piṇḍī. For Devī, it is her mount the Lion; Garuḍa for Viṣṇu ; Lotus for Brahman ; the elephant Airāvata for Indra ; the Fish for Cupid ; the Peacock for Kumāra and so on. In this context, Abhinavagupta explains that Piṇḍī is so-called because of the limbs forming themselves by bending etc. into different shapes (GOS. Ist edn. p. 170). The entry of women-dancers is taken up again after a few verses devoted to the setting of the orchestra (śls. 286 ff.). Here again the women-dancers are said to display the Piṇḍī-bandhas. It is at this place that Bharata speaks (śl. 295 ff) of four varieties of Piṇḍīs.

पिण्डीनां विधयश्चैव चत्वारः संप्रकीर्तिताः ॥
पिण्डी शृङ्खलिका चैव लताबन्धोऽथ भेद्यकः ।
पिण्डीबन्धस्तु पिण्डत्वाद् गुल्मः (गुम्फः) शृङ्खलिका भवेत् ॥
जालोपनद्धा च लता सनृत्तो भेद्यकः स्मृतः ।

Piṇḍa is a formation by two dancers ; Gulma or Śṛṅkhalikā, chain, is formed by three ; Latā, creeper, is by four ; Bhedyaka, obviously by more. Abhinavagupta explains further that the combinations may be homogeneous or heterogeneous ; i.e. in the first, in the combination of two, the two dancers might form a pattern in which both of them hang like two lotuses from one stalk ; this is homogeneous, sajātīya. When one of them poses like a swan and another hangs from her like a lotus stalk, the two are not in uniform pose and hence this is vijātīya. The text in the printed GOS. edn. (Ist as well as IInd) is incorrect and is given here with some possible corrections :

नर्तकीयोज्यः परस्परसम्बन्ध एव पिण्डीबन्धः, सजातीयो वा एकनालाव-बद्धकमलयुगलवत्, विजातीयो वा हंसवदनपरिगृहीतनालनलिनवत्। गुल्मः शृङ्खलिकाशब्दवाच्यः नर्तकीत्रयप्रयोज्यस्तु। ततोऽपि वैचित्र्यसहिष्णुत्वात् विचित्रतां गच्छत् सजातीयविजातीयात्मा लताबन्धश्चतुष्टयप्रयोज्यस्तु...।

Some writers understood these varieties in a slightly different manner, Piṇḍī itself being taken by them as Gulma, cluster, the others being Śṛṅkhalikā, Latā and Bhedyaka. See Śāradātanaya who says in his Bhāvaprakāśa (GOS. p. 246).

अपरैर्नृत्तभेदास्तु गुल्मश्शृङ्खलिकालताः ।
भेद्यकश्चेति चत्वारः—
पिण्डीबन्धश्च गुल्मश्च पर्यायाविति केचन ।

A clearer description of these is given by Śāradātanaya when he says that in Gulma the dancers come together, in Śṛṅkhalā they join their hands together and dance in a row like a chain, in Latā their bodies intertwine and in Bhedyaka, one is steadfast while outside his or her figure, others dance in a group.

गुल्मः सम्भूय यन्नृत्तं शृङ्खलान्योन्यबन्धनी।
परस्पराङ्गवेष्टेन यन्नृत्तं सा लता स्मृता॥
एकैकस्य बहिस्सङ्घात् नृत्तं यत् स च भेद्यकः।

Gulma is to be done in the slowest tempo; Śṛṅkhalā in a slightly quickened pace; Latā in medium tempo; and Bhedyaka in the fast or fastest. (N.Ś. IV. 289-290; Bhāvaprakāśa p. 246)

These patterns were not achieved without mechanical aids; yantras, seats etc., referred to as yonis, were employed.

पिण्डीनां विविधा योनिः यन्त्रं भद्रासनं तथा।
शिक्षायोगस्तथा चैव प्रयोक्तव्यः प्रयोक्तृभिः॥

N.Ś. IV. 290-1; Bhā. Pra. p. 246.

See also pp. 588-9, my Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa (1963) section on Nṛtta-Lāsya.

Jāya takes Piṇḍī as defined simply by Piṇḍana; according to him, Gulma or Gumphana goes with Śṛṅkhalā.

तत्र पिण्डी तु पिण्डनात्।
गुम्फनात् शृङ्खला, भेद्यो भेदनात्, जालवल्लुता॥

There are many additional noteworthy particulars mentioned by Jāya : Firstly, Jāya speaks of expert male-dancers also participating in this. He speaks of the dancers' dress too : Saree, shorts, cotton-wear on the body, hair in a bunch or plait, or dress according to the region. The third detail spoken of by Jāya is the method of the entry of the dancers : As the instruments are being played, the dancers, executing the same Cārīs, should enter in pairs, from either side. Jāya waxes eloquent over the beauty, youth and alluring qualities of the dancers and in their flashing movements, he compares them to lighting. Carcarī-songs in diverse Rāgas suited to the season or Deśī songs and the Abhinayas of their meaning by the dancers are also mentioned. They enter and go out and enter again and while dancing, sound the rhythm by snapping their fingers, or by striking each other's palms and form manifold patterns.

This is Rāsaka according to Jāya and he compares the dancing ladies to Gopīs, thereby indicating a relation to the Rāsa dance of the Gopīs with Kṛṣṇa. The name Rāsa may be due Rasa or to Rāsa-tāla; according to the S.R., a Sūḍa-song was called Rāsa by reason of its Rāsa-tāla or *R*āsaka and *L*āsaka may be doublets, the former being a rhotacism for the latter. It is clear that Jāya fully follows in his description of Rāsaka, Bhoja's description of it in his Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa. See my Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa (1963) p.56 ; Bhoja's words are more or less reproduced by Jāya; Bhoja also mentions 16, 12 or 8 dancers, Piṇḍī-bandhas etc. Jāya has combined part of Bhoja's description of the next type Nāṭya Rāsaka with Rāsaka.

According to Abhinavagupta, Rāsaka employs a variety of rhythms and the number of dancers go up to 64 (Abhi. Bhā. GOS. I. p. 183).

Carcarī

According to Bhoja, Carcarī is otherwise called Nāṭya Rāsaka. By saying at the outset चर्चरीमेतदेवाहुः, Jāya too means that Rāsaka, described just before, itself becomes Carcarī when the dancers enter, singing Carcarī songs in Varṇa-tāla or Dvipadī songs, portraying Śṛṅgāra or Vīra Rasa and describing the season (spring) and the patron-King's qualities. The dancing comprises circular movements which is a characteristic of Rāsaka. The description draws clearly on the Ratnāvalī and on Bhoja's description in the Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa. See my Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa (1963), pp. 562-3. Indeed Bhoja's description is very elaborate, and as already pointed out, part of it is joined by Jāya to the description of the main Rāsaka. Of both Rāsaka and Nāṭya Rāsaka alias Carcarī, circular movement is essential ; and Carcarī is definitely a spring dance.

मण्डलेन प्रनृत्यन्ति कान्ता वासन्तिकोत्सवे ।

Jāya VII. 99

Nāṭya Rāsaka

While Bhoja, as noted above, would call Carcarī itself Nāṭya Rāsaka, Jāya would give the latter as a further Deśī form different from Rāsaka and Carcarī. The season for this too is Vasanta but Jāya seems to see distinction in the feature that in this, the words of the song are interpreted in padārtha-abhinaya style :

चरितं भूपतेर्यत्र पदार्थैरभिनीयते ।

VII. 100.

In Rāsaka however, as Bhoja seems to say, there is to be only a general representation of the theme or the over-all idea, in vākyārtha-abhinaya style :

वाक्यस्था विधयो ह्येते..... ।

Śr. Pra. Madras Ms., Vol. II. pp. 425-6

Jāya mentions songs in Hindola Rāga (VII. 100—देशीहिन्दोलगी-तिभिः । This feature Śārṅgadeva gives for Carcarī itself, S.R. IV. 292-3 रागो हिन्दोलक: etc. See my Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa (1963), pp. 566-7.

Daṇḍa Rāsaka

The next dance described by Jāya in this Rāsaka-series is Daṇḍa Rāsaka, i.e. the same as described above, but done with short sticks in the hands which the dancers strike to keep the rhythm. It is the same as the Kōl-āṭṭam of the Tamil region. Jāya devotes seven verses to it and Pārśvadeva a few more lines.

The sticks or Daṇḍas used are short, coloured ones made of wood of Arjuna or other trees ; or adds Jāya, instead of two Daṇḍas, a fly-whisk (Cāmara) or a dagger along with one stick, according to the regional practice, could be held in the two hands.

अथ वा दण्डचामरे ।
क्षुरिकादण्डकौ यद्वा तत्तद्देशीयभङ्गिभिः ॥

VII. 104.

The movements are to keep to the instruments and their rhythms and should involve those to the right and left as also circular ones with sticks brought together at specific points in the course of the rhythmic movements. Pārśvadeva adds the names of a number of Tāla-instruments that are used in it, cymbals, bells (big and small), paṭaha, huḍukkā, mṛdanga and karaṭā.

On the mode of entry, Jāya says that eight of the dancers may first enter; and gradually, by the addition of batches of four, the number may go to sixty-four, formed into two rows. Pārśvadeva however, starts with two at the first entry, these being augmented by pairs one after another, till eight pairs are formed in two rows facing each other or with their backs to each other. S.S.S., TSS., pp. 24-5. see my Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa, pp. 564-5.

Śivapriya

As its name shows, the Śivapriya, found also in Kumbhakarṇa in the same terms as in Jāya, is a Śaivite dance, done by Śiva-devotees during Śiva-festivals. Trumpets, drums, cymbals, particularly the Kirikiṭi are played in it. The kirikiṭi is mentioned also as Kirikiṭṭaka and Śukti-vādya and described by Śārṅgadeva (S.R. VI. 1198-1200). It is a large metal shell, three inches broad and two and a half cubits long, looking on the whole like a serpent; in its hollow, it is uneven, being marked by lines or furrows and a horn-like piece, Koṇa, is rubbed to produce rhythmic sounds. Jāya says that these Kirikiṭi instruments, looking like serpents with spread-out hoods, are held by the dancers on one hand, with the playing Koṇas on the other. The dancers are dressed like Śiva-devotees with holy ash and Rudrākṣas all over the body and comprise men and women. The songs are on Śiva and the movements are in two rows facing each other or in a circle.

कांस्येन घटितान् यद्वा लोहेन फणिनः करैः ।
वामैः वामेतरैः कोणान् बिभ्राणास्तन्मयानपि ॥
स्फुरत्किरिकिटीकारं वादयन्तो लयानुगम् ।

VII. 108-9.

Cintu (Cindu)

The next Deśī form in Jāya, Cindu Nṛtta, is found described in other works like Saṅgītacintāmaṇi of Vema, which draws upon Jāya, the Saṅgītadarpaṇa of Dāmodara and the Saṅgītamuktāvalī of Devaṇa. It is a South Indian mode, Cindu being a song-type in a Dravidian language.

श्रव्यैर्द्रविडदेशीयैः कलप्तैस्तत्काकुरीतिभिः ।
गीतार्थाभिनयोपेतैः द्विपदैश्चिन्तुसंज्ञकैः ॥
* * *
चिन्तुनृत्तमिति प्रोक्तमिदं द्रविडवल्लभम् ॥

VII. 114. 116.

Apart from the song and instruments, a noteworthy characteristic of Cindu is the rhythmic swayings by the dancing women of their breasts, arms and hips, which as noted above, is the Deśī Lāsyāṅga called Kittu.

प्रयोगैश्चापि तैः कित्तप्रचुरैस्सुलयैर्मुहुः ।

The description in the Saṅgītādamodara, beside mentioning the chief detail of Cindu-songs in Dravidian language, speaks of the dancers carrying tridents, Triśūla, in their hands and of the dance itself being of two main kinds, Viḍacindu and Kalacārī (p. 222. Tanjore Sarasvatī Mahal edn.). The Saṅgītanuktāvalī of Devaṇa, a South Indian work, familiar with Telugu-Tamil areas (Tanjore manuscript p. 113) gives Telugu or Tamil as the language of the song and devotes some detailed attention to the song and the rhythmic crescendo, the Kalāsa, to be danced here.

The Cindu was being practised till very recently in Āndhra deśa by village communities as part of the festivals (Jātrā) of village deities. Processions were taken out with Paṭaha or Tomtom (called Tambaṭṭa) and the singing of Cindu-songs. It was not unusual for some communities to use the Cindu dance and song as an offensive against another local community by making them the subject of the Cindu songs, couch the songs in obscene terms and take out effigies of that community as part of the procession. Local riot and legal action resulting from Cindu used to be reported in the Press.1

1. On 8th January 1935, there were in Kurnool and Cuddappah Districts riots caused by Cindu dance and suits in Munsiff's Court against its performance and these were reported in the Hindu of August 16, 1935.

Kanduka Nṛtta

The next dance described by Jāya is playing with the ball, systematised into a dance. Kanduka-khelana is an old pastime which is featured in Act II of the Svapnavāsavadatta; from the Tamil Bṛhatkathā, we learn that it figured much in the stories of Udayana's love-marriages.

As an elaborate dance, it is described in chapter VI of the Daśakumāracarita, in the story of Princess Kandukāvatī, an expert in the dance with the ball as her name signifies. The Kanduka-nṛtya is done by this Princess on the day of the Kṛttikā each month to propitiate Goddess Vindhyavāsinī. Such was the command of the Goddess by whose grace she was born to King Tungadhanvan of the Suṁha Country that till she got her appointed bridegroom, she śhould perform this Kanduka-nṛtya every Kṛttikā in Her shrine. According to Daṇḍin's description, this was danced on a platform and beating the ball and catching it, the Princess executed steps in different rhythms and patterns, starting with medium-slow tempo, then quickening her pace, and then with quick forward and backward movements called cūrṇapada. In explainiag cūrṇa-pada, it is interesting to note that the commentary Padacandrikā quotes a treatise called Kanduka-tantra on the art of playing with ball. In the beating of the ball, Daṇḍin refers to soft and violent strokes, mṛdu and amṛdu prahāras, and as the ball bumped up on the sides or straight in front, the Princess dexterously used either hand in dealing with it. A further technical element introduced by Daṇḍin at this stage is that after striking it severely and allowing it to go high, the dancer did Gīta-mārga, which, from its name, seems to mean that in the time taken by the ball to touch the ground again and come up, the dancer did some singing. But the commentator says that Gīta-mārga is taking ten steppings: 'दशपदचङ्क्रमणं गीतमार्गं विदुः' इति कन्दुकतन्त्रे । We may assume that this taking of ten steps was done, not mutely bút with a bit of singing.

The ball was sent up in every direction and while sending it, she moved about in a variety of poses of legs and hands, Karaṇas, which were sweet to see (करणमधुरं विहरन्ती). Because of the speed at which the ball was being hit on all sides, she had to spin fast, round and round, executing Maṇḍalas, appearing to create round her a cage. Other technical terms used for her movements are Pañcabindu-prasṛta and Gomūtrikā; the latter, also called, according to the gloss, Śātahrada or the lighting movement, is a wavy gait, but the former is obscure. There is frequent bending of the body up and down (avanamanonnamana) and the display does not come to an end before the Princess executes still further intricate playing, using more than one ball.

The variety of movements found in Daṇḍin's description is seen also in that of Jāya who speaks, in Kanduka Nṛtta, of the movements in designs of lotus, wavy line (gomūtrikā), snake and wheel, to the accompaniment of the appropriate rhythms on the instruments. The accompaniment, Jāya says, may also be provided by songs, used in other forms of Deśī-dance. Jāya describes the Kanduka Nṛtta as a group dance having several ladies. The balls, he says, might be of metal or wood with small round metal pieces inside to make them resonant during play. The employment of several dancers is to have the ball bandied about among them. The throwing and the catching of the ball involve movements and while moving, the Cārīs, Gatis and the Lāsyāṅgas are to be displayed and it is this that lifts up the game with the ball into a dance.

Bhāṇḍika Nṛtta

This is the dance of clowns, Bhaṇḍas, who shout and cry and make all sorts of noises of birds, and animals, ass, dog etc., and execute movements imitative of the lame, the stunted and children, and animals like monkeys[1]. They indulge in undignified words and acts, dwarf their limbs in their movements and themselves laugh. As the instruments are played, they keep the rhythm by uttering the rhythm-syllables by mouth or by clap of palms. This dance is intended to be comic and divert the King when he feels dull.

Ghaṭisa-strī Nṛtta

The name of the next Deśī dance described by Jáya is not clear. In the text it is found as Ghaṭisanī and in the colophon Ghaṭisi-śrī. As I have explained in the footnote on p. 224, Ghaṭisa or Ghaṭasa or Ghaḍasa is a variety of the instrument Huḍukkā[2] which is prominently played in this dance, as the very opening lines of its description show. Ghaṭisinī or Ghaṭisi-strī may then mean the woman with the Ghaṭisa ; if it is so, Ghaṭisi-śrī may be a corruption for Ghaṭisi-strī.

This woman, who is the dancer here, is a Caṇḍālī and a sweet-voiced singer, reciting songs of philosophical import, Caryā-padas. The subject of the songs is the God of the hunters, Śiva in the form of a Kirāta. She herself carries on her shoulder the Huḍukkā on which she keeps playing and is surrounded by singers, male and female, flutists, drummer and beater of cymbals and the drum called Karaṭāl. The dance-movements here should be soft and graceful. While this is mainly a lady's dance, a male may also perform it.

Cāraṇa Nṛtta

This is a dance-mode from Gujarat, which men and women of the ministrel class do. The main characteristic is the circular movement, Maṇḍalāvṛtti ; women throw over their heads the ends of their garments, like a veil ; the characteristic song of this dance is Dohaka, derived from Dodhaka metre and because of this, as I have mentioned in the footnote on p. 225, Kumbhakarṇa calls this dance Dohaka-nṛtta There is instrumention, recitation of jatis or bols by mouth, and among movements, besides the group going in a circle there is to be also individual Bhramarīs, along with hand-movements ; steppings are to be forceful, though on the whole the style should be lalitoddhata, partly soft and partly forceful.

This dance seems to have been described also in a work called Vāmadeviya for we find in Lakṣmīdhara's Śrutirañjañi commentary on the Gīta-govinda the following quotation :

चारणनृत्यलक्षणं तु वामदेवीये—

डद्य(द्ध ?)ता वाद्यचक्रेषु (-वक्त्रेषु) हाहाहुङ्कारभाषिते ।

p. 9, Tanjore ms.

Without dealing separately with a dance-form called Cāraṇa-nṛtta, S.R. describes a Cāraṇa (VII. 1329) as an adept in music, in Kiṅkiṇī-vādana and associated with Vikaṭa-nartakas.

Bahurūpa

This dance is described in several works. As noted on p.225. fn., the Saṅgītamakaranda, the Saṅgītasāra, the Saṅgītakaumudī, the Saṅgītanārāyaṇa and the Saṅgītadāmodara speak of it. This is also surviving to this day in some form in certain parts of India.

According to Jāya's description, it derives its name from the fact that it is the representation of a variety of characters of the world. It is thus a form of popular drama. The dress of each character-type, the acts and speeches appropriate to each, and indeed the imitation of the language of each, endow it with its realism. The main Bahurūpa-player is to be a quick-change artiste, versatile, and capable of speaking different languages; he is to be assisted by others, men and women. Jāya says in the end that Bahurūpa troupes are prone to present lower types involving unbecoming actions and speeches and disapproves of such lower varieties.

For Somanātha's reference to it, see above pp. 20, 22, Introduction.

In all the works produced in eastern India, the Bahurūpa is described in a single brief verse as a variety of Tāṇḍava dance, which seems to be too wide of the mark. Such is the case with the Saṅgītadāmodara[1], the Nāṭyamanoramā[2] and the Saṅgītasārasaṁgraha,[3] where the Sāṅgītakaumudī and Saṅgītasāra are quoted.

In South India, particularly in Āndhra and Tamil regions, what survives as Pahal Veṣam or Pagaṭi Veṣamu corresponds to Bahurūpa. The name means Day-time Impersonation, and it consists of a single gifted actor or a pair of them, with a woman, coming to a town or village, dressing themselves each day as a particular type of character, going round the village or town enacting an episode depicting that character and after a series of such representations, going to another village or town. I have seen very effective portrayals, from the points of view of dress, speech and action, of this daylight play.

Kollāṭa Nartana

This is an acrobatic dance consisting of walking on a high rope, poising, swinging or wheeling round on a high pole, escaping unhurt through sharp swords brandished about, lifting heavy weights and executing high jumps. These feats are accompanied by a large variety of drums, trumpets and cymbals.

Śārṅgadeva does not describe separately a dance called Kollāṭa, but he describes a Kolhāṭika as such with more or less the same details as seen in Jāya's work,—as one capable of weight-lifting, adept in pirouette and other movements, in walking on rope, in dancing with knives and in moving through an array of swords. (VII. 1330-1).

These acrobatic dances with swords etc. used to be exhibited till recently in the South, by adepts in it on the Vijayadaśamī day at the end of Dasarah ; the dance on pole and rope used to be done by a class of fallen people called Ḍombas whose historical association with music and dance is known from literary references and the Uparūpaka variety called Ḍombī[1]. A band of them, women and children, with ropes, poles, and their drums used to roam about, and set up at the street-end their posts for roap-walking and perform all the feats mentioned above. In Tamil, they are referred to as Domban-kūttāḍis, Domb dancers and acrobats.

With this Jāya's description of Deśī dances is finished.

SOME GENERAL SUBJECTS

The remaining part of Ch. VII of the N.R. is devoted to the description of the dance-master Nartaka (165-71), of the leader of the instrument-group and the one next to him, Mukharī and Pratimukharī (172-8), of the instrumentalists as a group, Bṛnda (180-2) and the leader of the vocalists, Mukhyagāyaka (182-8); while speaking of the last, Jāya says that, endowed with all the qualities and equipment of the chief male vocalist, there should be a lady singer too, as the lady's voice has a natural sweetness of its own. After setting forth the qualities which the vocal group (gāyaka-bṛnda) should possess (189-91), Jāya says that the vocal group may even consist entirely of women.[2]

1. See my Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa (1963) p. 568.
2. This is repeated in the next chapter (VIII. 53).

The orchestra or music accompaniment is described further under the heading Samudāya (ensemble), referred to also as Sampradāya, the tradition or practice as handed down or as prevalent among the artistes (193). The largest ensemble, called Uttamottama consisted of 84 members; 64 constituted the Uttama; 32, the Madhyama; 24, the Avara, 16, the Kaniṣṭha (194-5). Any group numbering more than the first, 84, becomes too loud for the stage, a Kolāhala, and should be used only in festivals and processions (196).

The Uttamottama of 84 is thus made up; Mukharī and Pratimukharī 2; Mṛdaṅga-players 32; Huḍukkā-players 4; players on Deśī-paṭaha 2; Karaṭā-players 2; time-keepers 2; those with cymbals 8; flutists 2; Otukārasl 4; Conch-blowers 2; Kāhala-blowers 4; chief women-singers 4; supporting women-singers 16 (197-201). These numbers are less and less for the smaller ensembles (201-211).

The Theatre

With the Theatre, Jāya's text comes back to Bharata and the text of the N.Ś. Ch II on the three types of play-houses is followed by Jāya. I have dealt with this subject[2] already and here attention need be drawn only to the noteworthy points in Jāya's treatment. On the three houses, their names, shape, demensions, the three sizes, large, middling and small, the comparative merits and defects of these and the preference for the middle size, - on all these Jāya reproduces Bharata. See Notes for the detailed correspondence between the two texts. An important point to which I have drawn attention in the footnotes on p. 238 relates to the Raṅgaśīrṣa (verse 219). There is a controversy among scholars as to there having been two separate parts of the Stage called Raṅgapīṭha and Raṅgaśīrṣa. I have beeu expounding the view that there were two such parts. It may be noted in this connection that Jāya mentions only the Raṅgaśīrṣa. For dances in which large numbers have to participate like the Rāsaka, Jāya desires a Stage with a larger dimension for the Rangaśīrṣa. A measurement of 8 cubits is provided as the distance between the Raṅgaśīrṣa and the chief spectator, the King (220) and

1. On the meaning of this, see Notes.

2. On these three types, see my articles on Theatre-Architecture in Ancient India, Triveni IV. 6, Nov-Dec. 1931; V. 4. Jan-Feb. 1933; and pp. 156-161 in Theatre of the Hindus, Susil Gupta, Calcutta.

a storey hidden with curtains (224) is also mentioned, evidently for such of the ladies of the Court as are not to be seen in public; for later, in the next chapter (VIII. 15), Jāya says that according to some, the Queen is to sit on the left next to the King but according to the learned authorities, she should not be seen in public. The rest of the account of the Theatre is taken up by the furnishing and decoration.

The chapter ends with an enumeration of the qualities and qualifications of the Sabhāpati and Sabhyas, the King or the patron and the audience. Regarding these, Jāya sets forth the same high standards laid down by earlier authorities. The next, the final chapter specifies in detail the seating arrangements for the various members of the Court and adds a large number of further interesting details about the furnishing of the hall from the point of view of beauty and auspiciousness. Attention is invited to the footnotes there, as well as the Notes at the end, in which I have explained some of the more noteworthy points here regarding persons or seats or modes of dress and make-up. The positions of the different members of the orchestra and where each should sit on the stage are then given (48 ff).

In the description that follows, two details are to be noted from the point of view of the Stage. One: According to Jāya, it appears that before the actual dance starts the danseuse stands on a raised platform on the stage, obviously at the centre, at the back; this elevated place is given two cubits breadth and one cubit height (śls. 67-8) and the danseuse is said to shine from here like a celestial damsel from a Vimāna. This raised platform is said to have four pillars with a canopy above. It cannot be definitely stated whether this was used by the danseuse as an actual dancing platform on the stage-floor or merely an elevation where she stood before the dance started and from which she got down to the ground below for the actual dance. The latter seems likely as the dimensions of this platform are too small for actual dance and the imagery of a celestial damsel in the Vimāna suggests a mere resting place from which she descended to the stage proper for the dance, (Raṅga-avataraṇa). Another: the curtains. In front of the danseuse thus standing, there are to be three curtains, or sometimes more according to one's fancy. These curtains should be richly embroidered and are to be eight cubits by four in dimensions. They are to be held at their ends by pairs of beautiful ladies, i.e. just as they are held in Kathakali and other surviving forms of traditional dance-drama. These three or more curtains held in front of the danseuse are to be removed one by one at different stages of the preliminary music; the first one goes just before the Puṣpāñjali or 'offer of flowers'. The third or last of the curtains seems to be specified as a transparent one, through which the danseuse could be seen, 'like Lakṣmī appearing out of the milky ocean.' (śls. 72-76).

The dress which the danseuse puts on is of interest, as today one is often asked about this and there are experimentations as to the most suitable wear for Bharata Nāṭya. In the course of his long and high-flown description of the danseuse and her make-up (śls. 34-37), Jāya specifically mentions her dress. She is to wear a close Ardhoruka, or half-drawer which is twice mentioned (śls. 43, 47). In the first mention, it is said that the thighs are to be seen for the correctness of the poses in Cārīs, Karaṇas etc. and for this purpose, the danseuse should wear an Ardhoruka and over and above that a transparent apparel (śls. 43-4). The close pyjama and the sari tied over it upto a little below the knees, providing for some clear view of leg-poses, which later developed as the traditional costume of the nautch dancers, thus go to the older Ardhoruka and transparent wear over it. The dance-sculptures also show a dress like this. Going further back, it may be recalled that in Kālidāsa's Mālavikāgnimitra, the poet makes the judge Paṇḍita Kauśikī say that the limbs should be seen as to their correct poses and positions and the dancers might appear in dress suitable to this requirement.

Jāya adds that pearl-garlands and other ornaments which are not closely attached to the limbs should not be used much (śl. 47), as these would interfere with the free movement of the limbs.

Kharvatā

As I have stressed elsewhere[1], one of the basic essentials of dance which should not be neglected during training is the lowering of the body a little at the hip so as to make the slightly bent thighs form a rhombus. In South Indian dance parlance, it is referred to in Tamil as maṇḍi. This is the characteristic stance which we find in all the dance sculptures and it is on this pose as the base that other movements are set forth in texts and executed by artistes. This lowering, the resultant pose of which adds its own beauty to all other poses, is referred to by Jāya as Kharvatā. First Jāya emphasises its along with Sauṣṭhava and as forming part of it. Ch. III, verse, 97-101. The extent to which the Kharvatā should be, is given by Jāya as 4, 8 or 12 inches (verse 101). Later in Ch. VI verses 123-5, when describing the Deśī Lāsyāṅgas or the points of excellence in the performance of the dance, Jāya again speaks of this Kharvatā, this time also as part of the first requisite Sauṣṭhava. He adds here (verse 125) that the option of 4, 8 or 12 aṅgulas for the lowering is mentioned to take into account the divergent regional practices, but any further lowering beyond this 12 will spoil the beauty of the art.

अतः परं तु खर्वत्वं परं नृत्ये न शोभते ।

The Saṅgītamuktāvalī of Devaṇa calls this Tuṅga-namra and the Tamil dance text Bharatasaṁgraha of Aramvalattanār[1] says that in this lowering, the distance measured between the nose and the navel should be the distance in between the two bent knees.

or the teacher's last words of instruction to the danseuse-pupil.

At the end of the section of the training of the danseuse, Jāya has a few verses (VII. 14-20) emphasising the most essential things which give to the dance its life, so to say, and form the secret of the success or beauty of the performance. Jāya says that when the course of training in music, instruments and dance has been gone through and the danseuse has attained mastery over them, the teacher shall impart to her what cannot be learnt by mere exercises or practices. Firstly, the music and its shades are to be underlined by the limbs (aṅgas) by appropriate sways and movements of the limbs; the feelings are to be depicted by the looks or eyes; the actual meanings are to be shown by gestures of the hand and the rhythm-syllables by the feet. This is more compactly put in the well-known dictum in the Abhinayadarpaṇa that the song should be sustained by the throat; the ideas are to be shown by the hands and the feelings by the eyes; and the rhythm is to be kept by the feet.

कण्ठेनालम्बयेद्गीतं हस्तेनार्थं प्रदर्शयेत् ।
चक्षुभ्यां दर्शयेद् भावं पादाभ्यां तालमाचरेत् ॥

The second point in Jāya is not quite clear, owing to the unsatisfactory text; but it seems to stress that the instruments should accord with the song, the song with the elements of the dance, the feet and hands, and the whole dance should be a concerted display of all these three, instrumentation, song and dance.

The third point is that to infuse life into her performance and to get a sense of living through the feeling of the songs which are interpreted in gestures, the danseuse should imagine or see in the patron or King in front the lover whom she is addressing with the song and abhinaya.

The fourth point is that as a capable artist, the danseuse should watch as she goes on with her performance, what element in the dance the audience likes and concentrate on that and display that more and more.

The fifth point is that when expounding a song through abhinaya, the danseuse should bear in mind that the eye, the mind and finally the Bhāvas and Rasas successively follow the hands which show the ideas or padārthas. This is more clearly stated in the well-known verse in the Abhinayadarpaṇa: Where the hand is, there follows the eye; where the eye goes, there the mind follows; where the mind is, there the Bhāva and Rasa are:

यतो हस्तस्ततो दृष्टिः यतो दृष्टिस्ततो मनः ।
यतो मनस्ततो भावः यतो भावस्ततो रसः ॥

The Disposition of the Orchestra (VIII. 48-52)

On the right of the danseuse, the Mukharī[1] is to sit in the foreground. On his left are to be the players on the Mṛdaṅga-drum, as also next to them the other players on Huḍukkā, Conch, Deśī-paṭaha and Karaṭā; next to them the blowers of Kāhala and beaters of cymbals. At their back is to be the Pratimukharī and his supporting musicians are to be on the left. At the back of the danseuse are to be the two chief lady singers; and on either side of them, those with cymbals and the supporting lady singers.

The Recital and its beginning (VIII. 54-76)

First, the flutist intones in the middle octave the Aṁśa note of the Rāga to be sung and the instruments get tuned to this. Then when the musical sound, nāda, fills the atmosphere, the drummers play 'Samhasta' (VII. 22-3); the deep sound which comes from all the instruments, like that of a rumbling cloud, is for the sake of removing impediments on the stage and securing auspiciousness and prosperity for the patron. This is perhaps the same as the Māyurī Mārjanā, resembling the rumbling of the cloud, described by Kālidasa as a prelude to Mālavikā's dance (I. 21). It is called 'Samhasta' here, as according to Jāya, both the hands simultaneously strike the faces of the drum vigorously. This is to be followed by a series of playing on the instruments compositions intended for them, Vādya-prabandhas, 'Jodani' on the Huḍukka-drum, etc.; and then other drums join one after the other (VIII. 57). The playing slowly waxes into greater elaboration and starting softly, it grows in volume and vigour. Then 'Praharaṇa', another Vādya-prabandha, is played. As all this is pure instrumentation, without any vocal music, all this is called Śuṣkavādya.

All this time, in the Stage, under a canopy on four stands, on a small elevation, the danseuse is standing, behind the curtains held by girls. At verse 76 there is an unindicated gap and the actual beginning of the dance proper is lost. The text, as it follows here, goes abruptly to the honouring of the dancer and others which comes at the end of the performance.

1. The leader of the drum-group. According to S.R., the drummers in the orchestra are of four kinds, Vādaka, Mukharī, Pratimukharī and Gītānuga. VI. 1039-1064.

The gap can be covered up in a way, by the earlier description of the Paddhati or the proper way of learning (Śikṣā) and of the beginning of the recital in Ch. VII. śl. 21 ff. the Śuddha and Vicitra Paddhatis. According to that context, after the preliminary instrumental music, the danseuse enters, with 'Saṁdaṁśa-hasta' and 'Samapāda'. Then her left leg should do the Nikuṭṭaka action, pressing the toes and lifting the heal, as for striking the ground with it.

Then follow alternating each other, instrumentation, singing and the recitation of rhythm-syllables. The Tālas are varied and in the Citra-paddhati, the style which has greater variations as contrasted with the Śuddha-paddhati or the simple style, the danseuse dances for the rhythmic-syllables (vādyākṣaras) played on the instruments.

Apart from the two styles of opening the dance-recital and starting on the first piece of actual dance, the Śuddha and Citra Paddhatis mentioned above, Jāya sets forth a Deśī-paddhati too (VII 69-76). In this, after the instruments of the orchestra have been mutually tuned properly and Samahasta has been played, Yati and Praharaṇa, two Tāla-compositions, are to be played; and after this, the danseuse is to make the flower-offering, the Puṣpāñjali. This Puṣpāñjali corresponds to the opening item called Alārippu in the South Indian dance-recital. This is followed by some more instrumental compositions, Rigavaṇi (Rigoṇi in S R.), Tuṇḍuka (Tuḍuka or Tuṇḍaka in S. R.), Yati and Praharaṇa. Sometimes, immediately after Rigo(gho)ṇi, Kavita, Uṭṭavaṇi etc. may be played; Kavita is the old name of what came to be called later Kavitva and continues today under the name Śabda. This sequence of instrumental playing of Tāla and Vādya compositions is called Puṭila or Kuṭila[1] by some, and as the Puṣpāñjali is to be done with this, it is also called by some (i.e. Pārśvadeva pp. 52, 55) by the name Puśpāñjali itself. This style is followed particularly in the dance-display called Prekkhaṇa or Prekṣaṇa. In this dance, to the accompaniment of the different Tāla compositions played on instruments and mentioned above, the danseuse dances with Utpluti-Karaṇas, Bhramarīs, Cārīs and Maṇḍalas — (VII. 78-79).

1. Śārṅgadeva uses the form Kuṭila; in Jāya's ms., it is found as Puṭila, but in Tulaja's quotation from Jāya it is found as Kuṭila.

The Chief Court-dancer

The Chief Court-dancer was a highly respected person. In VIII. 41, Jāya says that she comes to the hall on a gilded palanquin attended by women who carry parasol, fly-whisks etc.

The King's Entry

As the King or patron enters the hall, ladies with auspicious lamps inside golden vessels in their hands, receive him with songs ; and then with instrumental music playing Tāla-prabandhas, Yati, Praharaṇa etc., and soft dance, they wave the lights before him ; and then the King enters into the dance-hall proper (VIII. 7-11).

JAYA'S POETRY

All through the work, Jāya shows himself as an accomplished writer. His mastery of language, capacity to work in easy and sustained Śleṣas and powers of description are evident. For elaborate and successful Śleṣas, the verses which introduce or close the topics of Cārīs (III. I, 68), Karaṇas (IV. 1, 243) and Aṅgahāras (IV. 254) could be cited. Verse 83,p. 255 at the end may also be seen. His ability to describe concepts graphically is seen best in his presentaion of the Deśī Lāsyāṅgas (VI. 117-173). High-flown poetic description could be seen in the last two chapters where Jāya eloquently portrays the Pātra, the danseuse and her endowments and describes her dress, the dancing hall, the curtains, the entry of the King and the entry of the danseuse.

EVALUATION OF JĀYA'S CONTRIBUTION

In the different contexts in the Introduction, the importance and value of Jāya's work have been shown. Attention has been drawn to his genius in understanding and interpreting Bharata ; it has also been shown how Jāya's work is useful for the textual criticism of Bharata, Jāya even reading lines not commented upon by Abhinavagupta (p. 155; see fn). In incorporating post-Bharata material, his liberal attitude is in evidence. His thorough knowledge of Abinavagupta and the help his text affords in construing passages in the Abhinava-bhāratī and in restoring its corrupt lines have been shown. How much we owe to Jāya for our knowledge of the traditions of Kīrtidhara and Taṇḍu has been particularly expatiated upon in the Introduction. The light which Jāya's treatment throws especially on the Karaṇas in sculpture and the problem of correlating them with texts has been brought out in a very detailed manner. The most significant part of Jāya's contribution lies in the Deśī, the Deśī Lāsyāṅgas and the description of different forms of Deśī dances, on all of which, in the absence of earlier texts, Jāya's work, along with that of Pārśvadeva, forms the most valuable source of information. In this respect, the work of Jāya is more important than that of Śārṅgadeva who gives only a few Deśī forms and adds only a few Deśī-items under Cārīs, Sthānas and Lāsyāṅgas. Both in the Mārga and the Deśī sections, the usefulness of Jāya's text for tracing back a current practice in respect of a hasta or a pose or a dance mode or sequence has been pointed out more than once. In the whole field of dance, there is no doubt that Jāya's Nṛtta-ratnāvalī is one of the foremost treatises, whose publication has enlarged the knowledge of the subject and reduced considerably the obscurity in several aspects of this difficult art and its not altogether well-understood history and evolution.

The author of this work is also mentioned as Rudra and his patron also as King Pratāparudra. The colophon in this work runs:

To the inscriptions cited here may be added the Malkapuram stone pillar inscription of Kākatīya Rudrāmbā, which mentions the gift of a village Mandara (Mandaḍa) to Golaki Viśvesvaraśambhu, by his royal pupil, endearingly referred to as his son, King Gaṇapati. This epigraph describes in detail the endowments and arrangements made by Viśveśvaraśambhu at Velaṅgipūḍi, gifted to him by Gaṇapati's daugter Rudrāmbā. Provision was here made for a Śiva temple, a Śuddhaśaiva Maṭha, an Agrahāra of 60 Drāviḍa Brāhmans, students, scholars etc. including 10 danseuses, 2 Mukharīs or chief drum-masters, 8 Maddala-vādakas, an artiste from Kashmir, 14 songstresses, 6 Karaḍā (ṭā)-vādakas etc. These last, the musicians and dancers, were attached to the Śiva temple mentioned above called Viśveśvaradeva after the teacher-founder (MER. 1917, p. 124 ff.).

Actually, in his other work, the Paṇḍitārādhyacarita as could be seen from the long Telugu passage extracted (pp. 26-27), Somanātha has the longest list, giving about fifty of them.

Ganeśa ; in the gap in the last line are lost words which might have meant something like this : "May he (Gaṇeśa) producing Śambhu's laughter (by this imitation) protect us." From here the verse endings and numberings have been wrongly indicated in the Mss.

1. A.B. gap. In this Upajāti verse, of which the first line is almost lost, the greatness and universal appeal of dance is described ; in the first line, Śiva is probably referred to in his formless aspect ; in lines two and three his taking different forms like Sadāśiva is mentioned as being due to His constant delight in His own cosmic dance.

2. A. भराम। मनोऽपि here may be त्मनोऽपि। 3. A.B. सदाशिला 4. A.B. न कैर्य

5. This Śārdūlavikrīḍita is again on the indescribable sweetness and joy of dance which, the verse says, Śiva, Kṛṣṇa and Brahmā practise with their respective beloveds ; the portion referring to Śiva and Pārvatī at the opening of line 1 is partly lost and partly corrupt. A reads here.....त्रवलीवगुवति and B.....कुहलीव गुहति।

9. Corrupt. A. छन्दानवन्धा गिरा B. छन्दानवन्दा गिरः। May be मधुरिमस्पन्दो न वर्ण्यो गिरा meaning, "Of that dance, the sweetness cannot be described in words."

5.* This last quarter has a small gap in both Mss. which has been restored as above on the basis of the sense and what is left of the quarter; the meaning is that without mukha-rāga, āṅgikābhinaya is mechanical and lifeless, the verb 'bibharti' and the available letter 'sā' suggests 'sāmyam' or 'sādṛśyam', the latter being metrically adequate; the letters at the end 'sta (ve ? ce) ṣṭitaiḥ' contain in the first component of the compound, some word standing for the sense 'mechanical' or 'a lifeless object', and it might well be a 'doll' or 'pusta'.

* 'तालमात्रान्तरालयोः'—This seems to refer not to a Nṛtya-hasta-viniyoga, but a Nṛtta-hasta-viniyoga; the meaning seems to be something like the Intermediate Pauses in the midst of the rhythmic sequences; in the present South Indian Bharata Nāṭya, for example, in the poses figuring in Tillāna and elsewhere too, the double Sūcī (Samyuta) hooked together as mentioned here (mithaḥ śṛṅkhalitā) occurs in the arms held over the head like a frame round the face; one whole sequence with variations is done with this pose.

1. A. B. मादं 2, A. B. हस्तौ

* After this the two mss. indicate no gap, but the meaning of the author requires here something more, between the quarter य एव युज्यते हस्त: and तत्तेषामप्यनन्तता. The second and third quarters of the verse seem to be missing, and तत्तेषां etc. appears to be the last quarter of the verse. The meaning is "the whole universe is to be rendered in gesture ; hence gesture is infinite ; however only the 'hand' that is suitable (is used; even so many are the suitable hands;) hence, the 'hands' are also infinite; therefore the Sage set forth only the more common ones."

5. A. करपार्श्वौ दिनेदने B. करपार्श्वादिनोदने. Reconstructed on the basis of meaning. The application of the hind-foot as goad to the animals one is riding is clear ; Someśvara who gives these varieties of foot has here अश्वादिप्रेरणे। 6. B. धु
7. The usages of Mardita are not given by Śārṅgadeva ; Someśvara gives them, but all those mentioned by him apply to Nṛtya, except one Apasarpaṇa, i.e., moving without the sole giving up the contact of the floor, which refers to Nṛtta ; the sole usage of Mardita mentioned by Jāya, viz , किङ्किणीविधि, seems to refer to the same Apasaraṇa-movements of Nṛtta, those in which the sole is moved close on the floor, called so probably, because the tinkling of the bells alone indicate the Tāla and Laya in this. Cf. Bālarāmabharata, TSS., p. 106. * The restoration here is based on the sense of the passages; Jaya takes Samapāda cari to be a real Carī involving movement according to its name and not a cārī by courtesy as all writers including Abhinavagupta (p. 97 GOS. II) and Śārṅgadeva (p 757, S. R. II, Anandasrama edn.) have taken it; more of this will be dealt with in the Introdution; suffice it to point out here that, what Jaya means in this verse is that Carī involves movement, and says that Bharata too intends so by using the plural 'pādaiḥ'; otherwise, if it is a mere pose, we cannot have, as distinct from this, the Karaṇa called Samanakha. For Samanakha, see below and N.Ś. IV. 65 (GOS. I).

* For this reconstruction see Abhinavabhāratī, GOS. II, p. 115, line 5.

† Here occurs a gap in the text not noticed by the scribe On the reconstruction of the second quarter of the line and on the topic of the fourfold handling of the bow see Nāṭya Śāstra, xi. 92-3 Kasi edn . X. 92 K.M. edn.

The topic found dealt with next is the 'Sitting poses', 'Upaviṣṭa-sthāna' or 'Āsana-vidhi', which Bharata deals with later, ch. XIII. 193. ff. Kasi edn. and XII. 202 ff. GOS. II. Here the text begins abruptly, with the end of definition of the pose called 'Utkaṭa.'

The first of the 'sitting poses', whose description is lost in the gap is 'Svastha' which Bharata describes thus :

विष्कम्भेनाञ्चितौ पादौ त्रिकं किञ्चित्समुन्नतम् ।
हस्तौ कटूरुविन्यस्तौ स्वस्थे स्यादुपवेशने ॥ XIII. 194-5 Kasi.

XII. 203 GOS. In K M. here, there is a gap after the third foot in which the last quarter of this verse, the whole of the next verse and the first quarter of the next are lost.

* The K. M. text (XII. 173) and the fn. readings of Kasi and GOS. texts preserve Avahittha among the uses of this Āsana.

† There is again a gap in which the remaining Āsanas are lost. Neither the nomenclature nor the enumeration of these in Bharata is clear: according to the S. Ratnākara, Bharata gives nine of these (S. R. VII. 1036-7) Svastha (lost in the ms. of our text), Madālasa (our Cintākrta), Krānta (our Yogakṛta), Viṣkambhita (lost in our ms.), Utkaṭa, Svasthālasa, Jānugata, Muktajānu and Vimuktaka (the last four lost in our ms.). Bharata XII. 206-7 (GOS) is obviously S.Ratn.'s Svasthālasa :

प्रसार्य बाहू शिथिलौ तथा चोपाश्रयाश्रितः ।
मूर्छामदश्रमग्लानिविषादेष्वुपवेशयेत् ॥ (Cf. S Ratn VII 112)

Viṣkambhita : Bharata XII 209-10 (GOS.) :

विष्कंभितं पुनश्चैव [should be श्चैकं] जानु भूमौ निपातयेत् ।
प्रियाप्रसादने कार्यं होमादिकरणेषु च ॥

But this definition and application are found in S. Ratn. for 'Muktajānu' (VII. 1115), and Viṣkambha is defined differently (VII. 1109-10); the Sangītamuktāvali has Muktajānu, but omits Viṣkambhita. The Avahittha of our text, which has its basis in Bharata, is not found in S. Ratn.

For the rest we have in Bharata (GOS. XII. 210-213) the following verses :

महीगताभ्यां जानुभ्यामधोमुखमवस्थितम् ॥
देवाभिगमने कार्यं रुषितानां प्रसादने ।
शोके चाक्रन्दने तीव्रे मृतानां चैव दर्शने ॥

This refers to Bharata XII. 159-177 (GOS.), XII 157-170 (Kasi), XII 138-149 (K. M.) where Bharata describes, in the midst of the treatment of Gati, the three Sthānas of ladies Āyata etc. and ends with the words 'अथापि च'. The Abhinava-bhāratī has no comments referring to these. While the S. Ratn. mentions only four additional Sthānas of women, our text adds a fifth, Pronnata.

* The N. S. in the GOS. edn. gives two sets of definitions and the editor says in the fn. (Vol. II. p. 163) that Jāyasenāpati follows the first set; but this statement is not wholly true; for Jāya compounds both.

† The S. Ratn. reads विस्मये; but for विनिश्चये which is correct see N. S. GOS. II. XII. 171-2; here again Jāya draws also upon the bracketted extra readings; note also the application Lajjā which is not found in S. Ratn. and is found only in the bracketted readings in N. S. GOS.

† This is found in mss. of N. S both as Vāmabandha and Vāmaviddha ; see N. S. GOS. II. p. 123; S. Ratn. has it as Vāmaviddha ; in our text, A reads Vāma(vi)ddha and B Vām(vāma)bandha, and later, in the lakṣaṇa-grantha, both A and B read Vāmabandha.

§ The first quarter of this line is corrupt in both mss.; but the meaning is clear : in regard to the definition of each Maṇḍala, the poses of the legs involved have to be specified ; and for this, the Cārī-names themselves are used in masculine gender and applied to the leg-poses which characterise each. cf. S. Samāsataḥ is supported also by Bharata XII, end; on the other hand 'Samantataḥ' of B. may be suspected to carry a true variant, as 'Sama' is given by Bharata and Abhinavagupta as an example of a mixed Maṇḍala which could be formed by the mixing of appropriate ones either of the Bhauma or the Ākāśa [group; but then the anvaya of the succeeding lines becomes difficult.

§ The sense is these additional Maṇḍalas are composed by mixing different Cāris of the same class, Bhauma or Ākāśa. In पूर्वोक्तलक्ष्याणि an instrumental plural qualifiying चारीभिः is needed; also for 'lakṣya,' we should have a word meaning 'lakṣaṇa'.

‡ See how close Jāya keeps to Abhinavagupta who says here (GOS. I. p. 100) जप्यमङ्गलादिविषये तु नास्य प्रयोगो युक्तः यथा कैश्चिदिष्टः ।

§ Here again Jāya bases himself on Abhinavagupta who interprets Pralambitahasta as Latā and adds: 'not Dolā', ibid. p 100: "प्रलम्बितौ करावितिलताहस्तौ मन्तव्यौ । न तु दोलाहस्तौ— ।" Then Abhinavagupta assigns the reason why it cannot be Dolā which too Jāya reproduces in the next line as: शोकैकविषयावेतौ (i e., दोलाहस्तौ). In the GOS. edn. however this portion is corrupt and the editor fails to note that the passage as printed makes no sense: तयोरेकविषययोरत्र etc. Here तयोरेक should read तयो: शोक. For Śoka as the application of Dolā; see section on Samyukta-hastas, N. Ś. IX, 149. (GOS. II) and our own text above p. 47, verse 188.

* For these applications, see Abhi. Bhā. I. p. 109, last three lines and also ibid p. 96, lines 3, 4. The S. Ratn. also reproduces these in VII. 624-5. I am afraid that Jāya has not understood Abhinavagupta clearly here when he seems to give these as alternate prayogas for Vikṣiptākṣipta. The correct meaning of Abhinavagupta is that while some would apply this Karaṇa for 'Abhinaya' in sentences signifying 'gamanāgamana', Abhinavagapta's teacher, i.e., Bhaṭṭa Tota, would opine that such Karanas as involve Abhinayahastas are to be used contextually for Abhinaya, but those Karaṇas (by implication and relevancy, such as the present Vikṣiptākṣipta) which involve pure Nṛttahastas and pure Vartanās are to be used in pure Nṛtta, an idea correctly reproduced by Jāya above in verses 21-22 under the scope and use of Karaṇas in general. The further remarks of Abhinavagupta are a supplement to Tota's view ; i.e., other teachers add that not only in Nṛtta in general, but in cases of break in continuity, in pauses in between Abhinayas, in gait-movements, in change over to a new Tāla, in stylised fight-movements and in

* The meaning appears to be 'Once a way, consequent upon some natural activities, one may assume the pose of a single Karaṇa.' 'स्यादेव' or 'स्यादेवं' in mss. may be read 'स्यादेकं'. But, as stated in the next line, it is with two Karaṇas that the sense of dancing starts.

 For these lines see Abhi. Bhā. I. p. 93.

Vol. IV. p. 256) reads here 'वाशब्देन नियमः सूचितः इति व्याख्यातमभिनवगुप्तादिभिः ।' The correct reading here would be अनियमः ।

* This is to be taken as a Bahuvrihi qualifying 'Imāḥ' (dancers).

§ Qualifies 'Sabhāpatim' ; a Bahuvrihi; means, 'seeing in the Sabhāpati one endowed with the splendour of the ancient epic kings.'

† The fancy here seems to be that the sixteen Kaḷās of the moon which are of the form of damsels, with their defect of decrease and increase at an end, appear to have come together to attend upon their lord the Moon (Rājā which means also the King who patronises the dancers). There is Śleṣa in 'Asta-doṣodayāḥ' meaning 'having given up their habit of rising in the night.'

† Vaggeyakāra is the highest type of musician who is also a composer; Gāndharva is a musician proficient in Mārga and Deśi music; Svarādi is a musician versed only in the Mārga.

* This is Graha-makha, propitiation of the Planets.

§ According to the text of Kumbha, which echoes Jāya, the danseuse may dress her hair into Dhammilla (knot) or Veṇi (plait); and Kuntalas, bedecked with pearls, should add charm to the forehead. Kuntala goes with the forehead in S. Ratn. also, VII. 1241.

* The sense is that the body should be treated with coloured dust of sandal or saffron, in accordance with the complexion of the lady and the time of the year or day. In the corresponding place Kumbha says:

† The meaning is: 'adorned on her limbs with those ornaments, though with her limbs she was, is reality, adorning those ornaments.'

 The face with the nose-pearl resting on it, is like the moon with the Star Svāti on the moon's lap. Svāti, of all stars, is mentioned because the pearl is connected with that Star.

NOTES

(Including concordance of parallel passages or treatment in Bharata, Abhinavagupta, Someśvara and other writers.)

P. 3. Śl. 7. 1.2. : प्रौढाहङ्कृति.....मुदः । Mss. read here नातरंभितमुदः and नातरहितमुदः । The passage may therefore be reconstructed as प्रौढाहङ्कृतिना तरङ्गितमुदः ।

P. 6. Śl. 18. On the occasions for dance, Cf. Bharata, N.Ś. IV. 272-3.

Śl. 19: पूर्वरङ्ग etc. See Bharata N.Ś. (Kāśī edn.) Chs. IV and V on the propitiatory stage-preliminaries which are to be gone through before the play actually begins, and which constitute the Pūrvaraṅga. Originally Bharata had a plain Pūrvaraṅga, but when he took his troupe and played before Śiva the Ḍima called Tripuradāha (N Ś. IV. 10 ff), Śiva who was pleased, told Bharata that he might learn, through Taṇḍu, the Tāṇḍava-dance promulgated by Him, and add them to the Pūrvaraṅga, so that what was Śuddha-pūrvaraṅga might become Citra-pūrvaraṅga. It is in this sense that Nṛtta is, as the text says, Pūrvaraṅga-prayojya and Nāṭyopakāraka.

Śls. 20-22 : Cf. Bharata, N.Ś. I. 8-12, 16.

P. 7. Śl. 24 : पुत्राः शाण्डिल्यप्रमुखाः शतम् । For the list of these hundred sons of Bharata, see Bharata. N.Ś., 26-40.

Śl. 24, line 2. कट (?) ध्वजमहादिषु. The corrupt word कट in the ms. may also be restored as शक्र, as the festival of flag, Dhvajamaha, mentioned immediately after, is the festival of Indra's flag—Indradhvaja. It cannot be restored as कृते and taken as referring to Kṛtayuga, for according to N Ś. I. 8, it was when Kṛta had ended and Tretā had set in that Drama was thought of.

Śl. 25. Cf. Bharata, N.Ś. I. 119.

Śl. 27, derivation of the word Abhinaya : See Bharata, N.Ś. VIII. 6-7.

Śl. 28, See Bharata, N.Ś. VIII. 8.

Śl. 29, See Bharata, N.Ś. VIII. 10.

Śls. 30-4, See Bharata, N.Ś. VIII. 12, 15-16, and Ch. 24 (Kāśī edn.), Sāmānyābhinaya, verses 41-48 on six kinds of Śarīrābhinaya.

Śl. 35, For Vācikābhinaya, see Bharata, N.Ś. Ch. 14 ff. (GOS. edn. Vol. II).

Pp. 8-9. Śls. 36-46. On Āhārya, see Bharata, N Ś. Ch. 21 (GOS. edn. III).

P. 9. Śls. 47-9. On Sāttvika and its explanation given here, see Bharata, N.Ś. VII. 94 ff.

P. 11. Śls. 50-53 : The Mārga-dance referred to is what is described in the preceding lines as Nṛtta which comprises the Karaṇas etc. taught by Śiva from his own Tāṇḍava. It is the display of pure rhythmical movements, (layāśraya). Nṛtya is interpretative dance in which a feeling is conveyed through gesticulation or Abhinaya (bhāvāśraya). Examples of this latter are Śrīgadita etc. Ḍombī, Prasthāna, Prekṣaṇaka, Bhāṇikā, Goṣṭhī, Rāsaka, Hallīsaka, Ṣidgaka, Rāmākrīḍā, Durmallikā, Rāgakāvya, Nartanaka, Lāsya and Chalika are the other representatives of this class (Nṛtya). Abhinavagupta mentions some of them (Abhi. Bhā. GOS. I, p. 183) and Bhoja deals with them more fully. I have given a detailed account of these in my Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa (1963 ; 545ff.) and in a separate paper entitled Uparūpakas and Nṛtyaprabandhas presented to the Dance Seminar of the Sangeet Natak Akademi, New Delhi. While thus Nṛtta is pure dance and Nṛtya interpretative dance, Nāṭya is regular drama, Nāṭaka etc. By 'ādi' here the text means the other varieties of the Daśarūpaka class, Prakaraṇa, etc. Cf. Daśarūpaka I. 7-9.

Śl. 54. line 2. The Nṛtta is called Deśī when it shows regional styles and variations.

Śl. 55. The promulgator of Nṛtta is Śiva from whose Tāṇḍava it is derived. The reference 'यतस्सन्ध्यासु नृत्यता' 'मयापीदं स्मृतम् ' etc. in the Text is, as pointed out in the fn. here, Bharata's N.Ś. IV. 12-13 (Kāśī edn).

Śl. 56. On the two varieties of dance, the soft and delicate Lāsya and the vigorous Tāṇḍava, Cf. Daśarūpaka I. 10.

P. 12. Śl. 58 ff. On Lāsya and Lāsyāṅgas, see my Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa, (1963) pp. 574-83; also my paper 'The Bhāṇa and the Lāsyāṅgas' in the Journal of the U.P. Historical Research Society, XVIII. Pts. i-ii, pp. 135-147.

P. 13. Śl. 66: The definition of the Lāsyāṅga called Saindhava. The two characteristics पाठ्येन चोज्झितम् and भाषा च सैन्धवी seem to be mutually contradictory. The earlier and other definitions of Saindhava are perplexing. To obviate the contradiction, the Bharatakośa (Tirupati p. 971) reads Jāya's verse as पाठ्यं नाट्येन चोज्झितम्, a bold restoration not attested by the mss. Probably, we may be justified in emending पाठ्येन चोज्झितम् as पाठ्ये न चोर्जितम् meaning 'not exalted in its text' which would be in keeping with the use of Saindhavī Prākṛt and which is just the sense required. In Bharata, in the definitions as found in the different recensions, only one (KM. old edn. XVIII. 178) has any reference to the absence of Pāṭhya and reads पाठ्यहीनं स्वभावोक्तथा but here again, the correct reading would be पाठ्यं हीनस्वभावोक्तथा meaning the use of a low Prākṛt, which supports our reconstruction 'पाठ्ये न चोर्जितम्'।

P. 14. Śl. 72. On the two additional Lāsyāṅgas, see my Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa' and my paper 'The Bhāṇa and the Lāsyāṅgas' referred to above.

Śl. 73. On Taṇḍu teaching Tāṇḍava to Bharata at Śiva's instance, see Bharata, N. Ś. VIII. 36 (Kāśī edn.).

P. 17. Śls. 18-19: It is, as pointed out in the fn., Bharata, N. Ś. VIII. 36 (Kāśī edn.).

'Anutantra-vidhāyibhiḥ' refers to Kohala and other post-Bharata writers who developed the subject.

Pp. 17-18. Śls. 20-29 : The source of these eleven additional head-movements described here is not known. The first five of these are given also by Śārṅgadeva, S.R. VII. 76-9; Śārṅgadeva calls Nairājita by the synonym Ārātrika, and Tiryaktata by the name Skandhānata.

P. 27. Śls. 43-5 : The four additional movements of the lips given here are given by Someśvara in the dance-section of his Mānasollāsa and are also given in the S.R. VIII. 488, 494-6 (Adyar). Someśvara and Śārṅgadeva give Vṛtta in Jāya, as Udvṛtta. Someśvara gives other names to the six older movements: Mukula for Samudga; Kūṇita for Vivartita; Prasārita for Visarga and Kampita for Vepita.

P. 28. Śls. 49-54 : Seven movements of chin (cibuka) : The movements of chin include those caused by the movements of the teeth : 'Cibukam...jihvādantoṣṭha-karmabhiḥ' says Jāya; 'dantakriyayā cibukam (viii. 142)', and 'dantoṣṭhajihvānām karaṇāt cibukakriyā' (VIII. 147) says Bharata. Bharata has therefore no separate set of movements for Teeth. But Jāya gives later a set of Danta-karmas also. Śārṅgadeva (VII. 500-6) takes these as mainly movements of teeth (Danta-karman), and adds that Cibuka-movements can be known from these (512); and to the seven in Jāya, he adds one more; in fact there are two new ones in his list, Grahaṇa instead of Lehana and a Niṣkarṣaṇa. It is interesting to note that Someśvara has only Danta-karmans and no Cibuka; and in Dantas too, he gives only five, Dalaṇa (which is Kuṭṭana), Khaṇḍana, Kartana (Cheda), Dharaṇa (the Grahaṇa in S.R.?) and Niṣkarṣaṇa.

Śls. 55-57 : Seven varieties of Hanu. Bharata does not give them. Someśvara has this Hanu, but he gives eight, adding Calasaṁhata. These eight Śārṅgadeva has, but as varieties of Cibuka (VII. 513-16).

P. 29. Śls. 58-61 : Tongue and its six movements. Bharata does not have Jihvā. Someśvara has five; he seems to combine Vakra and Ṛkkānugā, omits Lehinī and has instead Pronnata. Śārṅgadeva has six (VII. 507-11) but instead of Nata of Jāya, has the Unnata which Someśvara gives.

P. 30. Śls. 62-4: Danta-karmans; see above note on Someśvara and the Danta-karmans given by him.

Pp. 30-31. Śls. 65-68: Nine kinds of shoulder-action: Cf. Bharata VIII. 164-171, which are followed by Jāya. But Someśvara and Śārṅgadeva differ, giving only five and these with different names (S.R. VII. 327-30).

Pp. 31-2. Śls. 69-74: 4 Mukharāgas. Cf. Bharata, N.Ś. VIII. 155-163. Verses 72-74 of Jāya, on the importance of Mukharāga have for their model, Bharata VIII. 159-63.

Pp. 32-59. Śls. 75-286: For the corresponding section of Hastābhinaya in Bharata, see N.Ś. IX. 3-170.

P. 33. Śl. 87: The line is Bharata, N.Ś. IX. 17 (Kāśī edn.) Cf. also S.R. VII. 93-101 where also this question is discussed.

Śls. 87-88. Here śl. 87, first half, is from Bharata IX. 17 (Kāśī edn.). The Hastas, single and double and for Nṛtta, given by Jāya are just those given by Bharata, in name and number, 24+13+29 which would give 66 in all and not 64 as Bharata expressly says चतुष्षष्टिकरा ह्येते नामतोऽभिहिता मया। Jāya gives the explanation, which is very intelligent, by putting emphasis on the word नामत:। If we count these Hastas by name, we get only 64, for the two Nṛtta-hastas, Sūcyāsya and Svastikau occur in the same form as the names of an Asamyuta and a Samyuta Hasta.

In the S.R., Śārṅgadeva counts the Nṛtta-hastas as 30, taking Alapallava-ulbaṇau as two, Alapadmau and Ulbaṇau. He too then asks how the number '64' (of Bharata) is to be explained and then offers the explanation, in a way different from Jāya. Śārṅgadeva, however, has to explain three instead of two; he says that among the Nṛtta-hastas, Svastika and Viprakīrṇa cannot be used independently of each other, as the latter automatically follows the former. Similarly Uromaṇḍalinau and Pārśvamaṇḍalinau and Alapallava and Ulbaṇa. These six could therefore, for all practical purposes, be counted as three. S.R. VII. 90, 94-98.

P. 34. Śl. 89: Jāya's reference to Someśvara's treatment of this subject; Someśvara differs, in yet another way. Someśvara gave 27 Nṛtta-hastas omitting the Valitau and Lalitau of Bharata. See Abhilaṣitārthacintāmaṇi, 3021-34 (unpublished portion):

नृत्तहस्तान् प्रवक्ष्यामि नामतः सप्तविंशतिः । and चतुष्षष्टिकराः प्रोक्ताः नाट्यस्याभिनयं प्रति । and नृत्तहस्तास्तथा प्रोक्ताः सप्तविंशतिसङ्ख्यया ।
नामतो लक्ष्मतश्चैव नृत्तार्थे सोमभूभुजा ॥

Someśvara offers no explanation for omitting Valita and Lalita; but Jāya explains that these two do not differ from Pallava and Latā and hence might be left out.

Śl. 90: On the possibility of Svastika and Viprakīrṇa being taken as identical, see above note on the treatment of this in the S.R.

Śl. 91: It has not been possible to make out the identity of writers who are referred to here as considering all the Nṛtta-hastas entitled '-maṇḍalas' as one omnibus Hasta called 'Maṇḍalinau'.

In the first half of the same verse, Jāya refers to some who considered Alapallavolbaṇau as two, Alapallava and Ulbaṇa, and replies in śl. 93 below that this will increase the number of Nṛtta-hastas, as given by Bharata.

As noted above, Śārṅgadeva takes Ulbaṇa and Alapadma as two separate Nṛtta-hastas, but we do not know of any pre-Śārṅgadeva text which took this view.

The line in Jāya śl. 91, first pāda, मतेऽभिन्नौ as printed may be corrected as मते भिन्नौ ।

Śls. 94-6: Cf. Abhi. Bhā on Bharata IX. 184, the first Nṛtta-hasta Caturasrau and IX. 199, the Nṛtta-hasta called Kari-hasta. See particularly Abhi. Bhā. on IX. 10 नृत्तहस्तानतश्चोर्ध्वं गदतो मे निबोधत, on which Abhinavagupta says:-'संयुता-संयुतरूपोपजीविन एत इत्येकाकिनोऽपि प्रयुज्यन्ते'. It is this last obsevation which Jāyar elaborates.

P. 41. Śls. 143-4: The single-hand called Kāṅgula, sometimes Khāṅgula also. The word Kāṅgula or Khāṅgula is obscure. Abhinavagupta gives two explanations, one of which is that, according to some, it means a scorpion.

P. 43. Śl. 156: Ardhacandra. Among its uses, Jāya gives बलनिर्घाटन. N.Ś. has just निर्घाटन. In Abhi. Bhā. (II. p. 36), we read निर्घाटनं बलान्निष्कासनमिति। Śl. 159: Jāya, among uses of Agra-saṁdaṁśa, gives सूक्ष्मपुष्पानां ग्रहणे; for this see Abhi. Bhā. II. 52: पुष्पाणां सूक्ष्माणामपचये। Bharata mentions just Puṣpāpacaya. See my fn. on p. 43 of the text.

Śl. 179. On the alternate name of Kūrmaka mentioned by Jāya here, as given by some for Kapota-hasta, see Abhi. Bhā. N.Ś. IX. 130, where this is recorded as a popular name : अयमेव कूर्माकारत्वात् कूर्मक इति लोके प्रसिद्धः । Cf. also S.R. VII. 187.

P. 46. Śls. 180-3 : Niṣadha. See fns. on these verses on p. 46. The different definition of Niṣadha given by Abhinavagupta is found in Someśvara's work :

कपित्थेन यदा हस्तौ(स्तो) वेष्ट्यते मुकुलः करः ।
विज्ञेयो निषधो नाम— ॥

S.R. has only this definition, VII. 209-10. In some mss., as also in the Kāśī edn. (IX. 148), this defintion is given by Bharata for Vardhamāna. On pp. 60, 63, GOS. Vol. II fn. 3, and the late M.R. Kavi noted this as Kīrtidhara's reading. Jāya who had access to Kīrtidhara and quotes from him, does not support M.R. Kavi. But Kumbhakarṇa, Nṛtyaratnakośa p. 56, lends support to Kavi.

Śl. 197: नेत्रादिचेष्टितैः Here I had given in the fn. reference to Bharata IX. 155, Kāśī edn. in connection with the bit देशकालप्रयोगार्थवेदी । For the text of Bharata corresponding to the bit नेत्रादिचेष्टितैः, see N.Ś. IX. 161, सर्वे हस्तप्रचाराश्च नेत्रभ्रूमुखरागैश्च कर्तव्या व्यञ्जिता बुधैः। For the bit in Jāya, स्थायिसञ्चारिसूचकैः, see ibid. IX. 154—रसभावविचेष्टितैः।

P. 49. Śl. 202: For verse 201 here, the reference to Bharata, N.Ś. IX. 165, Kāśī edn. has been given in the fn. For the śl. 202 also reference may be made to ibid: IX. 166, अथवान्यादृशं प्राप्य etc. As regards न वा कार्या मुनेराशयवेदिभिः in Jāya here, see ibid. IX. 167-70, where the situations are enumerated in which Hastābhinaya is not to be resorted to and only Sāttvikābhinaya is to be shown: न हस्ताभिनयः कार्यः कार्यः सत्त्वसमाश्रयः।

Śls. 203-4: For readings of these 20 Kara-Karmas, see N.Ś. GOS. edn. IX. 165-8.

Śls. 205-6: Hasta-karaṇa. Bharata does not define Hasta-karaṇa, but only gives its varieties. The definition of Karaṇa in Jāya is taken from the Abhinavabhāratī and is a close metrical recast of the Abhinavabhāratī-words under N.Ś. IX. 210 (GOS. edn.): (करणं) क्रियते सम्पाद्यते बलादेवाभिनय-विशेषो येनाङ्गुलितुलन (चलन or वलन ?)क्रियाविशेषेण स्वसमाप्तौ निराकाङ्क्षायां स करणम्, यथा कनिष्ठाद्यावर्तनेनालपल्लवः etc.

P. 50. Śl. 212: Here is another example of Jāya following Abhinavagupta closely, reproducing the latter's very words: On the part the facial features including the eye have to play during hand-movements as stated by Jāya in this verse, see Abhinavagupta on N.Ś. IX. 219; यतो हि वर्तना धावन्ति ततोऽहि मुखादीनीति तात्पर्यम्। (P. 81, GOS. II).

Śl. 213: On the 5 Hasta-pracāras given by Bharata, see N.Ś. IX. 171-2, Kāśī edn. There is another reading preserved in GOS. edn. and the Abhinavabhāratī mentioning Pracāras first as 3 and then giving them as 5 as the view of others. See GOS. IX. 181-2 and Abhinavagupta who identifies this five-fold analysis as Udbhaṭa's reading:

'उत्तानोऽधस्तलस्त्र्यश्रोऽग्रगोऽधोमुख एव च।
पञ्चप्रकारा हस्तस्य' इति भट्टोद्भटः पठति।

Abhinavagupta further explains that the two additional ones are included in the three, and the view that they are three is proper: तत्राधस्तले(लो)ऽधोमुखो(खे)ऽन्तर्भूतः, उत्ताने-ऽग्रगः, त्र्यश्रः त्रि(?) पार्श्वग एव। अत्रापि समविषमत्र्यश्रिताद्यवान्तर-भेद उत्तानादेर्भवति। इत्थं त्रैविध्यमेव युक्तम्। The reading of Abhinavagupta of the five according to Udbhaṭa differs from the five given in the text proper in GOS. IX. 182, which again is different from the reading in Kāśī IX. 171-2 followed by Jāya.

Śl. 214: The identity of the writer or writers referred to here as परे is not known.

P. 51. Śls. 215-6: The different views on the varieties of Hasta-pracāras, 3, 5, 10 or 15: For a full statement on this topic, see Śārṅgadeva, S.R. VII. 532-537.

Śls. 217-8: On the extent or degree of Hastābhinaya to be used by different types of characters, Uttama, Madhyama and Adhama, see Bharata, N.S. IX. 164 and Abhinavagupta thereon GOS. II. p. 167. Cf. Jāya's lines here with the following in Abhi. Bhā.—अत्र हि सात्त्विकभूयस्त्वात् ज्येष्ठत्वम्। * * * 'सत्त्वहीनोऽधमः स्मृतः' इति वचनात् तत्र विप्रकीर्णा विश्लिष्टा बहुलतमा हस्ताः। (P. 68, GOS. II).

Śls. 219 ff. For the 10 Bāhu-prakāras given here, see Bharata, N.Ś. Kāśi edn. IX. 205-6.

P. 52. Śl. 223. On the six additional Bāhu-varieties, see also Śārṅga-deva, S.R. VII. 337. The author who gave these 6 additional ones is not known. Two of these seem to be mentioned in N.Ś. IX, 221. (GOS.).

Śls. 227-8: Jāya's observations on the possibility of hundreds of arm-varieties are just a metrical statement of the follow-ing in the Abhi. Bhā. GOS. II. p. 82.

एतेषु करणेषु चतुर्षु द्रुतमध्यविलम्बितादिवैचित्र्येण बाहुपर्यायेण च समस्तानि (समस्तव्यस्त)योजनया यदा नियुज्यन्ते तदा घातवर्तनादि शतसहस्राणि; (तानि) अत्रैव अन्तर्भूतानीति यदेके चत्वारिंशतम, अन्ये शतमाहुः, तन्मिथ्यैव।

Pp. 52-3. Śls. 229-231 : For these, see Bharata N.Ś. IX. Kāśī, 167-70 GOS. 176-9. Regarding नभश्चयुते in Jāya, verse 230, see the fn. reading in GOS. II. p-69, marked 7. The first line of verse marked 232 in Jāya goes by sense with the two previous lines marked 231.

P. 53. Śls. 232-4 : But there is an exception in cases of Hastas which have natural connection to a state of emotion and they cannot be avoided in emotional situations. These verses of Jāya are based verbatim on Abhi. Bhā. here (GOS. II. p. 69):

ये हस्ता आन्तरीं चित्तवृत्तिं सूचयन्ति कपोतक इव भयं, कर्कटक इव मदनविजृम्भां, दोल इव शोकं, शुकतुण्ड इवेर्ष्यां ते कार्या एव; सात्त्विकवदनुभावस्य भावत्वात्।

Śl. 235 : For Jāya's statement of the reason for describing first the Nṛtta-hasta caturaśra, see Abhi. Bhā. GOS. VI, p. 71 :

चातुरश्रयमूलं नृत्तेऽङ्गस्य जीवितमिति तन्निमित्तभुवौ चतुरश्रौ तावदाह।

where the exact words used by Jāya are found. The Nṛtta-hastas are dealt with in Bharata in IX. 173 ff, Kāśī edn.; 183, GOS. edn. II.

Śl. 236. 'बिम्बसूत्र' : The meaning of this, it was previously pointed out in the fn. No. 10 on p. 53, is not clear. It appears to me now that it refers to a straight line such as drawn by architects, painters or modellers of forms (bimbas). That it means just a straight line with the shoulder is clear from Abhinavagupta who uses the analogy of the scales of the balance :

कूर्परांसयोश्च तुलाधारणवत् समत्वमवैषम्यम्। GOS. II. p. 71.

If we read ' Bimbasutra' as Brahma-sūtra,' it would be much clearer.

In the second line of this verse Jāya states the direction of the arms as पराङ्मुख। In fact, in Bharata and other later texts like S.R. the word here is प्राङ्मुखौ। That this means facing the audience and not the dancer and that therefore, for the dancer they will be really पराङ्मुख can be made out from Abhinavagupta's explanation here :

GOS. II. p. 71.

P. 54. Śl. 240: The alternate name Tālavṛnta for Udvṛtta is found in N.Ś. itself (GOS. II. ch. IX. 185). See also Abhi. Bhā. thereon.

Śl. 241 : On Maddalavādana as one of the acts for which these Talamukha hands are gestures, see Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 71, last two lines.

Śl. 245 : On the alternate view recorded here about the use of Svastika, Arāla and Khaṭakāsya, given by Jāya, see Abhi. Bhā. GOS. II. p. 72, last line.

Śl. 246 : Arālakhaṭakāmukham. Regarding the way of doing this through Svastika or by first doing Arāla, Jāya reproduces from Abhi. Bhā. GOS. II. p. 72 :

स्वस्तिकेनेति त्वपरे । अरालः, ततः खट्काविति्येके ।

Śl. 247 : Jāya's definition of Āviddhavakra, which amplifies Bharata, reproduces verbatim Abhi. Bhā. II. GOS p. 73. 11. 2-4.

Pp. 54-5 Śls. 248-49 : Based on Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 73, 11. 7-8. For Jāya's clarification of the movement involved as पर्यायेण, see Abhinavagupta's words here :

क्रियते * * तत्र तुशब्दः पर्यायं द्योतयति ।

P. 55. Śl. 254 : For the alternate view of using Tripatāka hands in Pallava, recorded by Jāya, see Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 74 :

शिथिलौ पल्लवाविति्यन्ये पठन्तः त्रिपताकाविति्यनुवर्तयन्ति ।

Śl. 256 : last line, on the alternate use of Tripatāka mentioned here, see Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 75 :

अन्ये तु नितम्बादिषु त्रिपताकावित्यनुवर्तयन्ति लताहस्तान्तेषु ।

P. 56. Śl. 258 : In Karihasta, Jāya's citation of others' views as to the use of Khaṭakāmukha and Lalāṭa, see Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 75 :

Śl. 259 : एतौ शोभावहौ नित्यं पक्षप्रद्योतपूर्वकौ—On this beauty of using together Pakṣavañcitaka and Pakṣapradyotaka, the statement in Jāya may be compared with Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 76 :

एवकारेणानयोः व्यामिश्रतया प्रयोगशोभा भवतीत्याह ।

Śls. 261-3 : The elaborate description of Daṇḍapakṣa in Jāya is based on Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 76, last 5 lines.

Śl. 265: For the Kīrtidhara-reference here, see Introduction, section on that writer. Abhi. Bhā. mentions this alternate name Cakravartanikā for Ūrdhvamaṇḍala, but not Kīrtidhara's name. (GOS. II. p. 77).

Pp. 56-7, Śls. 266-7 : Especially śl. 267 is totally based on Abhi. Bhā. 77, 11. 7-8. The reference to 'Kecit' in Jāya here is obviously to Kīrtidhara. See also on this the long quotation on Vartanas, said to be from Kohala and quoted by Kallinātha under S.R. VII. 348. There the alternate popular name Kakṣavartanā for Pārśvamaṇḍala is given. (P. 67, Ānandāśrama edn.; p. 108, Adyar edn.).

P. 57. Śl. 269 : The three lines here in Jāya are based on Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 77. 11. 9-12 ; especially Jāya's reference in the last line to the view of some which gives Hamsapakṣa-hands in Ūrdhva-maṇḍala and Pārśva-maṇḍala is based on Abhi. Bhā. here : ऊर्ध्वपार्श्वोरोमण्डलिषु हंसपक्षावित्यपरे वर्णयन्ति । On Urovartanikā as another name of Uromaṇḍala, see the Kohala-quotation in Kallinātha, ibid.

Śls. 270-1 : Jāya's detailed description of Uraḥpārśvārdha-maṇḍalau is taken from Abhi. Bhā. GOS. II. p. 78.

Śls. 272-5: Jāya's long description of Muṣṭikasvastika is from Abhi. Bhā. where however, Kīrtidhara is not mentioned by name. Cf. particularly Jāya's explanation as to why Muṣṭikasvastika is so called with the following in Abhi. Bhā. : पारम्पर्येण मुष्टिप्रभवत्वात् खटकस्य मुष्टिकस्वस्तिकव्यपदेशो मुष्टिशिखरकपित्थखटकानामन्यतरप्रयोगानुज्ञानार्थमिति तद्विदः।

Pp 57-8. Śls. 276-9: Jāya's detailed description is from Abhinavagupta who however does not mention here Kīrtidhara or the alternate name Padmavartanikā. But in the Kohala-quotation in Kallīnātha (p. 108, Adyar edn. Vol. IV), this alternate name as well as Kīrtidhara are mentioned. Especially Jāya's verses 276-7 and 279 second line are almost the same as those on this topic in the Kohala-quotation.

P. 58. Sls. 280-81 : Cf. Abhi. Bhā. II. p. 79. 11. 3-4.

In the Kohala-quotation given by Kallinātha, these verses in Jāya are found and the alternate name of tha Alapadmolbaṇa is also given. See p. 109, Adyar edn. In Ānandāśrama and Adyar edns., as well as in Kumbha's Nṛtyaratnakośa this alternate name is found as Ghāta-vartinakā ; but the correct name appears to be what Jāya has given, viz. Vāta-vartanikā. In the Ānandāśrama edn. (p. 678) अलपद्माल्वलौ with query and in the Adyar edn. (p. 109) अलपल्लवितौ are both incorrect ; the correct reading here is 'अलपद्मोल्बणौ'।

Pp. 58-9. Śls. 283-6: The additional single and double Hastas proposed by some ; Nikuñcaka, Dviśikhara, and the Nṛtta-hasta called Varadābhaya :

The first author who proposed these is not known. Several later texts mention these. The earliest available text other than Jāya's to mention these is the S.R. where Śārṅgadeva says that some propose these and then defines them also. VII. 100-1 ; 283-86.

In all the texts, S.R., S. Rāja, Bharatārṇava, etc. Śayana is given as one of the uses of Dviśikhara, and Aṇguli-sphoṭa is taken as the second use of this: शयनार्थेऽङ्गुलिस्फोटे etc. But that the mention of 'sleep' or 'lying on bed' is incorrect can be seen if we reflect on the use of this double-hand in life. This is quite commonly used, particularly by women, when they imprecate against one in anger or irritation, with the Dviśikharas held, not across in a line with the thumbs apart as they figure in some pure Nṛtta poses, but by the side of each other with the thumbs brought together and the arms thrown out in front in the direction of the person imprecated against. Therefore Jāya's reading which gives Śāpa, not Svāpa, as one of the uses of Dviśikhara is the correct one. Śāpa was wrongly read by scribes as Svāpa and from Svāpa, Śayana came as a synonym; or the form Śapana might have led to Śayana. And 'शापार्थमङ्गुलीस्फोटे' forms one unitary idea, and not two; for the Dviśikhara in this use is not static, but involves the action of alternately pressing the fingers of Śikhara hand by those of the other.

,, Śls. 316ff: 5 Jaṅghās. See N.Ś. X, 34ff.

P. 63. Śls. 320ff : 5 other kinds of Jaṅghā-movements according to others. 'The others (pare)' refers to Someśvara who gives these. As mentioned in the fn. on this on p. 63, Jāya's Bhramita is found as Parāvṛtta in Someśvara ; in the uses of each of these also, there is difference between Someśvara and Jāya. Śārṅgadeva is closer to Someśvara, though he has some differences in the usage of each variety.

Śl. 323 : 5 Pādas. See N.Ś X. Kāsī. 41ff.

P. 64. Śls. 329-30 : 10 other kinds of Pāda, Tāḍita, Ghaṭṭita etc. These are given by Someśvara. See further notes on p. 65. But Someśvara has only 9 ; instead of the last two in Jāya, the Aṅguli-pṛṣṭhaga and Talāhati, Someśvara has one Nija, the Svābhāvika, which Jāya does not take. Śārṅgadeva who takes these has however only 7 of these (VIII). 113-4. To the earlier list of Pādas which he gives as 6, and not 5, he adds a Sūcī, and omits Nija. Of these Sūcī is mentioned as an additional Pāda according to some in the Abhi. Bhā. itself, GOS. II. p. 91 : सूचीं षष्ठं पादमन्ये पठन्ति । In the text of the N.Ś. itself, verses on Sūcipāda are found as additional variants, Kāśī edn. X. 51-3, GOS. II. IX. 279-80.

Pp. 66-7. Śls. 338ff : Movements of fingers of the feet are not given by Bharata. Someśvara gives them. Jāya who gives 7, adds two more, Svabhāvaja and Anaṅguṣṭha-yuta, not mentioned by Someśvara. Also Someśvara's Prasārita is given as Stabdha by Jāya, and Samalagna, as Aṅguṣṭha-yuta. See Notes on p. 66. The last fn. on p. 66 "निजा:" in Someśvara is to be deleted; Someśvara has not got this either as Svabhāvaja or Nija. See also S.R. VIII. 521-4, which is faithful to Someśvara and gives only 5.

P. 67. Śls. 342-3 : Uses for fingers of the feet unaccompanied by toe (Anaṅguṣṭha-yuta) and accompanied by toe (aṅguṣṭha-yuta) given here by Jāya are new.

Śls. 344ff. 3 Toe-movements. It is Jāya who gives specific treatment of this. This too is not in Bharata. Someśvara has some remarks on the Toe, but he gives no varieties of it. Śārṅgadeva like Jāya, speaks separately of it. VIII. 524-5.

P. 68. Śl. 2. On the grammatical derivation of the word Cārī given by Jāya, see Abhi. Bhā. GOS, II. p. 93, 11, 1-3 wherefrom it is taken : चरेरिञ् करणे भावे वा औणादिक इति 'कृदिकारादक्तिन ङीष्' इति च चारीशब्दः ।

Śl. 3 : चार्यः कट्यादिपादान्तचेष्टयैव भवन्ति यत् । in Jāya is a typical example of how the Abhi. Bhā. is used by Jāya. Abhinavagupta's words explaining Cārī are (GOS. II. p. 91, 11. 5-6) : कट्यादिपादान्तकर्मणैव चार्य उक्ताः । See next in Jāya: पृथक् तासां विनियोगः, न प्रत्येकं भवेत्ततः which is after Abhinavagupta, अत एव तासां विनियोगः पृथङ्नोक्तः ।

Probably Musala-Ghātikā (घातिका) is the correct form of the name. Jāyā refers to Musalaghātikā as a Deśī-name but in the Deśī-section, Jāya does not speak of this category of alternate Deśī-names of Mārga Karaṇa and Cārī names.

The name Yoga-kṛta in Jāya is too recondite and is not supported by other texts. Pp. 87-8. Śls. 120-30 : Āyata-sthāna of women. The description in Bharata, which Jāya closely follows, is seen in words as close to Bharata as possible in the most beautiful picture of Mālavikā at the end of her dance drawn by Kālidāsa, in Act. II of the Mālavikāgnimitra : वामं सन्धिस्तिमितवलयं etc. The following concordances of Bharata and Kālidāsa will make this clear. Kālidāsa's :

वामं सन्धिस्तिमितवलयं न्यस्य हस्तं नितम्बे
कृत्वा श्यामाविटपसदृशं स्रस्तमुक्तं द्वितीयम्।

is after Bharata : समुन्नतकटिः and लतानितम्बगौ हस्तौ। Kālidāsa's पादाङ्गुष्ठालुलितकुसुमे etc. is after the lakṣaṇa : त्र्यश्रः पक्षस्थितोऽपरः, rendered more clearly by Jāya — त्र्यश्रोन्नतो भवेत्।

Mālavikā's act of playing with flower on the floor with her toe cannot be done except with this slight lift of the leg required by the lakṣaṇa. Finally, lest we should miss recognising in his miniature the Sthānaka called Āyata, Kālidāsa ends by saying स्थितमतितरां कान्तमृज्वायतार्धम्। Here Sthita is Sthānaka : and ऋजु and आयतार्ध or straight and drawn up upper part of the body are given by Bharata as उरः समं यत्र समुन्नतम्। And Āyata is the name of the Sthānaka.

On the two sets of definitions for this Āyata in editions of Bharata and on the readings followed by Jāya, see my fn. on this on p. 88 of our text. If there is a change of the 'right' and 'left' of the legs and arms in the same Āyata, it would be called Avahittha. From Kālidāsa's description, we cannot of course say, except it be on the basis of the word Āyata at the end, whether Kālidāsa was having Āyata or Avahittha in mind. The situations given by Bharata as appropriate for Avahittha would make it suit the situation of Mālavikā better.

P. 89. Śl. 129: In respect of the third Strī-sthānaka called Aśva-krānta, Jāya refers here to some writers who left the pose of the leg unspecified, as they were in doubt. It is not possible to know which writer is thus referred to by Jāya here. Unfortunately the Abhi. Bhā. is lacking here. That Abhinavagupta's detailed commentary was available on Āyata etc. is known from Śārṅgadeva who quotes him on Āyata (S.R. VII. 1062, Adyar edn. हस्तपादप्रचारस्तु तेषु ज्ञेयो यथोचितम्। भट्टाभिनवगुप्तस्य मतमेतदुदीरितम्॥)

In Bharata's text itself, there is option given for the foot-सूचीविद्धमविद्धं वा, but probably Jāya does not refer to this option in Bharata, but to the doubt expressed by some later writers.

The condition that the bent and raised leg, when it is brought down, should not touch the ground, is not preserved later. The Saṅgītamuktāvalī does not mention it. It is perhaps because of this that the sculpture also does not preserve this condition.

In fact, there seems to have been a persistent tradition that in Sūcī-pāda, the ground must be touched. In a verse additionally read by some mss., Bharata's N.Ś. itself (IX. 279-80, GOS. II.) gives this version of the Sūcī-pāda.

Regarding the reference to Muni in Jāya here, see *Abhi. P. 173 Śls. 1ff : Deśīpādas. Ch. VI. Cf. S.R. VII. 908ff, where Śārṅgadeva deals with them under Deśī-Bhauma-cārīs. See further fn. on p. 173, in our text. The descriptions in the three texts, Jāya, Śārṅgadeva and Pārśvadeva have close parallels; see especially the description of Prāvṛta, and the characterisation of this in the three, पुष्पेषोः केलिकाननम् ; मकरध्वजजीवनम् ; and क्रीडास्थानं मनोभुवः ।

Śl. 4 : Ullāla. In S.R. this is found as Ullola, but in S.S.S, Ullāla as in our text. The total number of Deśīpādas in S.S.S., exceed very much the number given in our text ; in S.R. of course, they are likewise more numerous as they are dealt with under the Deśī-cārīs. In both S.R. and S.S S, these include several whose names occur also under the classical Cārīs and Karaṇas. In fact, as Jāya himself says below, other varieties of Pādas or actions of the feet are given under Cārīs of the two classes, Bhauma and Ākāśika (p. 18 ff. śl. 59ff.).

P. 174. Śls. 14ff : The Pāṭas numbering twentyeight, dealt with here, are not found in this manner, in one set or under a single heading in the S.R., ; but single Pāṭas here could be found in different places in S.R. Thus Ūrutāḍita is found in S.R. under Bhauma Deśī Carī ; Udvṛtta occurs in several contexts; so also Alaga, mentioned among Deśī Karaṇas. Alaga-pāṭa occurs also as part of the Peraṇī-dance. Trikoṇa, Catuṣkoṇa and a variety of Luṭhita are to be seen among the twentyfive kinds of striking of the floor by the feet, Kuṭṭana, called Madhupas quoted, as from Kohala, by Kallinātha under S.R. VII. 1017 (Adyar edn. pp. 313ff). One of the later works to give these Pāṭas as found in Jāya is, as pointed out in our fn. on p. 174, the Saṅgītacintāmaṇi of Vema.

P. 175. Śl. 15 : त्रिभिः। The first class of Pāṭas is eight kinds of Tāḍita enumerated in this verse From the definition which follows, it is to be understood that this word Tribhiḥ stands for the variety called Vi-tāḍita; actually, as all the three—Aṅgulipṛṣṭha, Pārṣṇi and Tala, are involved in this, it is mentioned in enumeration as त्रिभिः (ताडितम्)।

P. 176. Śl. 23 : After this, the numbering of verses, owing to a printing mistake, has gone wrong ; 27 which follows should be 24. There is no gap in the text here.

P. 178. Śl. 42. Read the name as Talodghaṭṭita.

P. 181. Śls. 59-60ff : Cf. the note above on the Deśī-pādas and Deśī-pāṭas. The S.R. adopts this method of dealing with the topic of Deśī-varieties of foot-work, all under the head of Deśī-Cārīs of the two varieties, Bhauma and Ākāśika. While the S.R. gives only 25, Jāya gives 26, of the Bhauma class ; and with the exception of the first, the Samanakha in Jāya, all the 25 of Jāya's list are found in S.R.'s 35. The remaining ones in S.R. are, as already pointed out, given by Jāya under Pāda-varieties dealt with earlier. Samanakha, the first in Jāya occurs under the Bhauma-Cārīs of the old classical list and appears as Samapāda-Kuṭṭita under the Kuṭṭitas or Madhupas cited by Kallinātha.

P. 183. Śl. 73 : Śakaṭī. Same definition in Someśvara, but the name of the Cārī given there is Kātarā Deśī-Cārīs of the Ākāśika variety are given in S.R. as 19; of these Jāya has 14 under his own list of Ākāśika-deśī-cārīs, the rest under the earlier described Pāda-varieties.

P. 186. Śl. 100 : In the Daṇḍapāda-definition after the word पार्श्वप्रसारितस्य the word पादस्य is understood., ऊरु in print should read as ऊरुं । It is significant to note that Jāya gives this as his own idea of Daṇḍapāda. The first definition of Daṇḍapāda in the previous verse 99 is the same as in S.R. VII. 1006-7 (Adyar).

Pp. 189-190. Śls. 123-128 : For Śauṣṭhava, Sthāpanā, Rekhā and Ḍāla, see S.S.S., pp. 71-2. On Rekhā, see also S.R. VII. 1216. On some of these Deśī-lāsyāṅgas as mentioned in the Paṇḍitārādhyacarita and Basavapurāṇa, see Introduction, pp. 21-2, 29.

P. 190. Śls. 129-30 : Calāvali. Cf. S.R. VII. 1207-9 (Adyar) with which Jāya agrees closely. S.R. gives the second as Cāli-vaḍa.

Śl. 132 : Lali. Two definitions of this Deśī-lāsyāṅga are given by Jāya, śls. 131-132. Of these the first is as found in S.S.S. and the second agrees mostly with that found in S.R. which gives it as Iaḍhi.

P. 191, Śl. 133. Tṛkani : See S.S.S. p. 71, śls. 199-200, where it is printed as Tūkali. In Somanātha's Basavapurāṇa, this occurs as Dhūkali; see Introduction p. 29 and fn.1.

In the S.R. a Deśī-lāsyāṅga called Sūka is given, which is not traceable in Jāya or S.S.S. It relates to the graceful rhythmical movement of the ears.

P. 201. Śl. 189 : The emendation. वर्ज्यं. This may be वाज meaning 'side'. Cf. the same p. 231, śl. 177, vājavādya.

P. 203. Śl. 5 : Daṇḍikā and Sthūṇa. The staff placed between two posts, holding which practice is done. See below śls. 8-10.
Śl. 7 : Ardhoruka is half-drawer. Śrama is exercise. See also below śl. 13.

P. 204. Śl. 12 : Vaktra-vādya means oral recitation of rhythm-syllables, Śol (South Indian) Bol (North Indian).

P. 206. Śl. 25 : Puṭila ; S. Sārāmṛta reading Kuṭila. Cf. S.R. VIII. 1257 (Adyar), Kuṭila as the name of the best type of Saṁpradāya or Mela (the orchestra or supporting musicians).

Śl. 27 : Malapa an instrumental composition, vādya-prabhandha; see S R. VI. 992-995. A section of the composition is set with rhythm-syllables 'Taddhi' etc. Aṅga mentioned after this is Malapāṅga, a composition in which Malapa has been made part. See S.R. VI, following lines 995-6. Pāṭa is the rhythmic syllables embodying or signifying the sounds emanating from the percussion instruments. They are Taka-Takiṭa, Thoṁ etc. See S.R. VI, Tāla ch., śls. 851ff. These are mentioned by Bharata also, not with this name Pāṭa, but for the same purpose of instrumentation (Śuṣka-vādya or nirgīta vādya) and dance; they are called by him Vādyākṣaras and are dealt with in N.Ś. (Kāśī edn.) ch. 32, after śl. 39. In fact Jāya himself uses the old Bharata-term Śuṣka-vādya in the next line and subsequently too.

Śl. 29 : Maṭṭena Cf. S.Ś.S. p. 74, Dhruvā Maṭṭaśca etc. Refers to the Tāla Maṭhya ; but this part of Jāya's text has different readings ; the Sārāmṛta-citation reading 'Arthena' would imply an actual song at the beginning, before the pure instrumentation, Śuṣkavādya.

P. 207. Śl. 31 : On Śuddha Paddhati which is mentioned here as set forth by Mataṅga, Cf. S.R. VII. 1260-72 (Adyar).

Śl. 32 : Varṇasvara. A composition. See Prabandha ch. of S.R. and other works. Sārāmṛta has it as Varṇasara.

Śl. 34 : From here different Deśī dances are described. On these see Introduction. First the Preraṇī dancer and dance are described. Cf. S.R. VII. 1301ff.

Śl. 35 : Pañcāṅga-kuśala: Refer to the five constituents of Peraṇī described below, śls. 43ff. Because of the five aṅgas, Peraṇī is called Pañcāṁśi by Somanātha. See Introduction, p. 21.

P. 208. Śl. 43 : The five aṅgas of Peraṇī-Nṛtta, Kaivāra, Gharghara, Vikaṭa, Gīta. The enumeration of Jāya follows S.S.S. p. 72. śl. 214. Vāgaḍa in S.S.S. is Prākṛt of Vikaṭa.

P. 209. Śl. 45: Kaivāra. Prākṛta form of Kavicāra. Cf. S.R. VII, 1303. It is the poetic panegyric on the patron.

Śls. 46ff. Gharghara. The bells worn by the Preraṇī-dancer on his shanks. See above the description of his make-up.

Pp. 209-210: Śl. 46ff : Gharghara. On its aṅgas, see my fn. on p. 209. The following table shows the slight difference in the names of these aṅgas, which is not an unusual feature in respect of Prākṛt terms like these :

1. Cāvaḍa	2. Cāpaḍapa. The reading Apaḍapa in S.R (Adyar) and Siṁhabhūpāla's commentary does not seem to be correct.
2. Paḍivāḍa	1. Paḍivāṭa
3. Rundha	Not in S.R.
4. Siribhira	5. Sirihara
5. Khaluhula	6. Khaluhula
6. Alagnapāṭa	4. Alagapāṭa
7. Siripiṭī	3. Siripaṭa

P. 210. Śl. 55 : Ṣaḍanye pādabhedāḥ. See my fn. on that page.

P. 211. Śls. 56-7 : Vikaṭa. Comic dance. See S.S.S. p. 73, śl. 218, where it is called Vāgaḍa. See Jāya's reference to this Prākṛt form of the name. Another Prākṛt form of the name given by Somanatha is Veḍayāṭa ; see Introduction.

Bhāṇḍīkānām prasiddhitaḥ. The Bhāṇḍīka is the dialect in which Bhoja and Someśvara gave the technical terms of music and dance. Cf. S.S.S. p. 5. भाण्डीकभाषयोद्दिष्टाः भोजसोमेश्वरादिभिः। There are mss. of two works on the grammar of this language in the Sarasvati Mahal Library, Tanjore (mss. nos. 5944-9).

Of these five Aṅgas of the Peraṇī, which have the same names in Jāya and S.S.S., S.R. gives Nṛtta as Viṣama, and Vikaṭa as Bhāvāśraya.

Śl. 60. Paisāra. This is given also as Vaisāra ; S.S.S. has Vesāra and S R Paisāra.

Śls. 59ff : Peraṇīpaddhati. Cf. S.R. VII. 1316ff.

Samahasta, Rigoṇi, Pada, Paisāra, Yati, Upaśama,-these are Vādya-prabandhas. See S.R. Vādya ch., VIth, śls. 945-950. On Samahasta alone see S.S.S. p. 53, śls. 247-8. The order of the items of Peraṇī-performance set forth by Jāya is the same as given in S.S.S. p. 73 śl. 221ff.

P. 212. Śl. 62: Antarā, a Vādya-prabandha. Cf. S.S.S. p. 73, śl. 223.

P. 213. Śls. 69ff. Deśī-paddhati of Peraṇī. Some of these are found in S.S.S. p. 73, śls. 222ff., Tuḍuka (Tuṇḍuka in Jāya), Jheṅkāra, etc.

P. 214. Śls. 74-5 : On the dance-item called Puṣpāñjali described here as part of the Deśī-paddhati, see S.S.S. p. 55 to which Jāya's text is very close here. See my fn. and quotation from S.S.S. on this page.

The term in śl. 75, first line 'अन्तरा' may be Āntarā or Āntarī or Antarī; it is found in all these forms in S.S.S. (pp. 54, 55) as the name of a set interim instrumentation coming in between a regular song and an instrumental composition. See especially p. 54, śl. 157. In S.R., it is given in the simple form Antaraḥ in masculine; see Vādya-prabandhas, ch. VI. 947 and 1000 (Adyar).

P. 215. Śls. 77-9: Prekṣaṇa or Preṅkhaṇa; also found in texts as Pekkhaṇa Cf. S S.S. p. 73, śls. 223-4, where the order of the music and instrumentation of this dance are given by Pārśvadeva; Jāya follows this.

Pp. 215-6. Śls. 80-83: Jāya describes here two styles, the Śuddha and Chāyālaga, of the music and instrumental framework of the dance; Pārśvadeva mentions this in śls. 227-234, beginning with पेरणादित्रये गीतपद्धतिः कथ्यतेऽधुना and ending पद्धतित्रितये शुद्धे चित्रे सालगसंज्ञके। तत्तत्पद्धतिभेदेन वाद्यं कुर्याद्यथोचितम्।

P. 216. Śls. 84ff. The Rāsaka-dance is described here. On Piṇḍī, Śṛṅkhalā, Bhedya. Latā. see N.Ś. IV. 294-5. (GOS. I.); also see Bhoja's Śṛṅgāra Prakāśa (1963) p. 562 for almost identical lines.

P. 218. Śls. 98-9: Carcarī, spring dance. See Introduction.

Śls. 101ff. Daṇḍarāsaka. Cf. S.S S. p. 74, śls. 242ff.

Śl. 108ff. Śivapriya. Phaṇiṇah: The Koṇas or sounding metal rods in the hands of the dancers are of the form of serpents, i.e. curved body and with a hood-like round head.

Śl. 109. Kirikiṭi-kāram. Kirikiṭi is the rhythm-instrument of the above given description. It is also called Śukti. Śukti is the metal base on which, by the action of the Kirikiṭi-rod, the rhythm sounds are produced. See S.R. VI. 1198-1201 (Adyar).

P. 224. Śl. 134: Dohaka in Cāraṇa-nṛtya is the name of the song after its metre, Dodhaka (Sanskrit).

P. 227. Śls. 147ff: Kollāṭa-nartana. Cf. S R. VII. 1330-1, Kolhāṭika. See Introduction.

P. 229 Śls. 161-4: These verses end with a colophon 'नर्तकीलक्षणम्' which should more properly be 'गोण्डलीनर्तकीलक्षणम्' or simply 'गोण्डलीलक्षणम्'। For detailed description of the Goṇḍalī-dance, see S.R. VII. 1276-1302.

P. 230. Śl. 166: मुखवाद्यविशारदः। Mukhavādya is the oral recital of rhythmic syllables corresponding to the sounds emanating from the drum (Jati, Śol or Bol). The description of Nartaka in these verses is really of a Upādhyāya-nartaka or a dance-teacher. The description is close to that of the Upādhyāya in S.R. VII. 1247-51.

P. 231. Śls. 172ff: Mukharī, chief drummer; Pratimukharī, a subordinate drummer. चतुर्विधो मार्दलिकः घादको मुखरी तथा। ततः प्रसिमुखर्याख्यः तुर्यो गीतानुगो मतः॥ Saṅgīta Darpaṇa, Tanjore Sarasvati Mahal edn. p. 100.

P. 234. Śls. 193ff. On the composition and strength of the large, middling and small ensembles, Cf. Jāya's lines with S.R. VII. 1253-8.

P. 235. Śl. 200: Otukāraḥ. The meaning of this is not clear. The word occurs again in śl. 203. In 206, next page again, Otudhṛt; in śl. 211, Otukāra. Does it refer to an instrumentalist who plays the Vādya-prabandha called Otā? For this Otā, see S.R. VI. 956-962 with illustration.

P. 237. Śl. 212: क्रमाद् गीर्वाणभूपालप्रभृतीनां भवन्त्यमी। Here 'Prabhṛti' may be a mistake for Prakṛti, the people. Cf. Bharata, N.Ś. II. 11.

On these three Jyeṣṭha, Madhya and Kaniṣhṭa for Gods Kings and common-folk, Jāya, śl. 212, Cf. N.Ś. II. 9-11. On the defects of the too large and too small halls and the merits of the medium-sized one, Jāya, 213-216, Cf. N.Ś. II. 18-21. The measurements of the square and rectangular house in Jāya follow N.Ś.

Śl. 218: The details taken up here are for a square house of 32 cubits.

Śl. 219: See fns. on this page.

Śl. 220: first line, शुद्धादर्श etc. is taken from N Ś. II. 76 (GOS.).

The seat for the Sabhāpati or King is to be eight hastas off from the stage, i.e. in the centre of the auditorium of 16 hastas.

P. 239. Śls. 223 and 224: कर्पूरीशोभितान्यभूः। See readings and suggestion noted on the page here. 'अन्यभूः' here may be restored also as 'आद्यभूः', as immediately in the next line (p. 239, śl. 224) we have reference to 'द्वितीयभूः'। Bharata speaks of the play-house as 'द्विभूमिः'. But what exactly these two 'Bhūmis' are, whether they refer only to the stage part and the audience part, is not quite clear. Of the different interpretations offered here in the Abhi. Bhā. (GOS. I p. 3, 64-5), one is as suggested above, the raised stage and the level-ground in front of it and around; another is that the two Bhūmis are the closed interior of the house and the outer open quadrangle, enclosure or prākāra all around the house, beyond which is the wall, as we have in temples; while this later meaning would also fit in with Jāya's descriptions of decorations, the reference to Nīrandhracchādana, close curtains, would suggest, as pointed out in the Introduction, a place for the inmates of the harem. Jāya speaks of an Ūrdhvabhūmi later on (p. 254, śl.77) in the description of the actual dance, but there is a gap in the text here and the reference is obscure.

Ch. VIII

Pp. 243ff. Śls. 1lff. On the order of the seating of the various members of the audience and royal retinue, Cf. also S.R. VII. 1341-50. On some of the out of the way expressions and ideas here see my fns. which have been added at every step on these pages.

P. 255. Śl. 83. Sucīmūkha, Gati, Guṇa, and Śikhara refer to the act of stringing a necklace of gems, Ratnāvalī, as well as to the components of dance, Nṛtta, the subject of the work; the line is thus Śliṣta.
