

NONSENSE OR THE BOWER OF ROSES.

I planted a bow'r and adorn'd it with roses And fill'd it with many sweet flowers, I made it for Charlotte, when at eve she reposes Or muses away idle hours.

ACROSTIC.

ON PRESENTING A ROSE.

Can there be sweeter charms than these Here Nature's grace and beauty bloom Ah why must such enchantment cease Regret with me their certain doom.

EXTRACTS FROM Mr. FOX'S HISTORY.

This work which is entitled a "History of the early part of the reign of James the 2d. with an introductory Chapter," is introduced by a preface by Lord Holland, which concludes with these words "his friends will contemplate with some satisfaction this monument, however imperfect, of his genius and acquirements; they will recognize throughout the work those noble and elevated principles, which animated his own conduct in life, and in the simplicity of the thoughts, as well as in the nature of the reflections, they cannot fail to discover a picture of his candid and amiable mind."

admitted; and it must be confessed, that, with regard to facts remote, in respect either of time or place, wisdom generally differs in their own judgment, and defer to that of those who have had a nearer view of them.

Although therefore, upon a review of this truly shocking transaction, we may be fairly justified in adopting the milder alternative, and in imputing to the greater part of those concerned in it, rather an excessive degree of blind credulity, than the deliberate wickedness of planning and assisting in the perpetration of legal murder; yet the proceedings on the Popish plot must always be considered as an indelible disgrace upon the English nation, in which King, Parliament, Judges, Juries, Witnesses, Prosecutors, have all their respective, though certainly not equal shares.

the government, after having incurred so much guilt in order to obtain the sentence, should, by renouncing it, relinquish the object just when it was within its grasp. The same historian considers the jury as highly blamable, and so do I; but what was their guilt, in comparison of that of the Court who tried, and of the government who prosecuted, in this infamous cause? Yet the jury, being the only party that can with any colour be stated as acting independently of the government, is the only one mentioned by him as blameable.
