MY COUSTY,

I feel as I ought, the fentiments you have testified to me on the fibility of the irreperable lofs, which I have follationed in the Perfor of my king and Nephew. If any thing can foften my just and profound grief, it is to obleve that it is thared by those who are on to many accounts dear to me. France loffs a King whose good qualities, had develoyed themselves in his tendesart infancy, announcing that he would prove a Successor worthy the best of Kings. It only remains for me to implore the Affiliance of Divine Providence, to render me worthy to repair to my subjects, so great a misfortune. Their affections is the first object of my delire, and I hope it will one day come to pass, that like Henry IV having reconquered my kingdom, I shall like Louis the XII be able to merit the appellation of the, Fasher of my tender, and, that the attechment they have experied thro'you to me, is already the dawning of a beautiful day, and that I depend Principally on you and them, to accomplish its meridian luste.
