On Monday last the Quarterly Sessions com-menced before Sir J. Mackintosh Knight, Re-corder of Bombay and his associates. The Recorder addressed the Grand Jury in corder of Bombay and his adocustes.

The Recorder addressed the Grand Jury in a short but appropriate speech, with some few observations on the nature of the eximes that were to come under their consideration, the first was, that of child markets, a crime which his Lordship observed was of a very peculiar and heimous natures, and being so cashly perpetrated without detection, in a very extensive population, it required every exertion to put a stop to it: the freedom crime was, firing handed arith to a Gentlemen's test, on the Esplanade, & the last was for an intention of way large two furging entitlemen, who were fairtus in the Court of the Recorder—On both those subjects his Lurdship made several very pointed observations; after which the Grand Jury proceeded to examine the evidence against Karkee, a woman, charged with the willful murder of Suckoo, semale Instant—and after having retired for some time returned "a trace bill".

Karkee was then brought to the bar, tried and sound goilty of the willful murder of the infant.

The Grand Jury also found a bill available.

In a work, unfitled "a Key to the Phenomena of Nature," a French wifer, Chevral Deflucrais, has made public a difcovery of the untool importance to Natural Hillory and Physical Geography. He afforce us, that, for 6,000 years, mankind have been exaculing about, without knowing it, on the back of an animal. This animal, which lives, eats, and drinks, and digelts; which thinks, walks, and perfpires; which has members and organs of fpeech; this wonderful animal is the Earth. Thus, and thus only, he fays, can hurricanes, tempelts, the eruptions of volcanoes, &c. be accounted for. MR. EDITOR, I congratulate my fellow-fub-jects, on the general firit of Enquiry that is excited, respecting the expenditure of the Pub-lic Supplies through all the Departments of the State. The corrupt practices in the Marine, have been sufficiently developed, to arge a con-tinuation of that Parliamentary Enquiry. The Country are given to expect that the Military will become the next, and immediate branch of National lawethigation.

Sir, I must here predict, that nothing floor of a tair, and open tribunal of enquiry, will either fatisty the just claims of the Country, or appease the general refeorment of a plundered Reople! These National Inquisitors must be felted out of independent Senators, men of business, and superior to all Staff, or other military indiance whatever. It will require, that they be not only men of infexible patriotism, but of affiduiry and unconquerable temper also; for, I apprise them, that they will have to pass mountains, and laby inthe of figures, drawn up for years in great martial array, and to explore defiles of fibileties, which nothing but patisece, & perfeverance can puffilly plus through! Their Commission must be rendered nugatory by no fifth Clause, institying a continuational filence in examinants, lett any acknowledgment on their part should tend to their own crimination—Having thus briefly flated, what will be required of Parliament in the outlet of this important measure, I shall, in my next, poin out the military objects, which will demand the fifth investigation.

BELISARIUS,

THE ARMY .- LETTER III.

To the Commissioners of Military En-Quiry &c..

GENTLEMEN,

Gentlemen,

By a special act of the Legislature, you are delegated to an important inquisition. Although you may not find yourselves invested with powers adequate to a perfect enquiry, you have at least, an ample field before you for affect exertions.

You have been selected inequal numbers, from professions affording talents best fitted for the fervice to be performed. It may not, however be improper to remind you, that authorities for constituted, are frequently in danger of an undue preponderance, in one or other of their component parts.

confirmed, are frequently in tanger of an under preponderance, in one or other of their component parts.

Under the pecoliar exigencies that demanded your appointment, it may, probably, require more than an ordinary exercise of public virtue on your part, and vigilance on that of the constituter, over the civil branches of your Board. I mean nothing perfonal by this observation. Your several characters in private life, have fairly entitled you to the mirk of public confidence by which you are distinguished. But I must be allowed distinctly to observe, that it will be required of subfiers, to enter upon this arduous duty, with a firmed not to be character. The real business which you are called upon to execute, will be best performed without the aid of any military measures whatever. You are primarily to enquire into the Commissional Departments. The data for each, must, of course for originally in the War-Office. Your various objects of investigation will be traceable from thence by figures only, through all the defiles of office, however close, and in tricate.

Your movements, in advance, may occasion.

all the defiles of office, however close, and in-tricate.

Your movements, in advance, may occasion-ally interrupted, by covert-ways, and other petty works thrown up by the frieddlent, but which will be more readily overthrown by the pen of the accomptant, than the Truncheon of the tactician! Though, in this progess, you must unavoidably different how an offical Cover, has drawn four times the annual intente beyond that of a Chancelor of England, you will not be differed to learn, that this species of extor-tion has been found too monitrous to be left for your correction!

be displeased to learn, that this species of extortion has been found too monftrous to be left for your correction!

It will be some time before you come to investigate that new anomalous is them, which draws every thing that is military within its devouring vortex. On the consequences of this violent change of lystem I shall call your particular attention in one time; pure be afforce?

shall never folicit you to over-step the fair line of your duty, or censure you for any thing short of a manifest dereliction of it.

The Structuce, Gentlemen, does not require that you should become misel censors of the British army. You will have but little to do with the vices, or follies of milistry men, males you sand them to be nortured by the public treasure, to by levies not lefs fraudulently drawn from
the pockets of individuals:

It will not be needful, that you should wound
the feelings of a discarded mistress by financial intertogatories, nor pry into the american dir of a triumphant rival, bussels you for their voluptious orgies have been corcuply interwoven with the calamaties of the Country.

Nor will it be required of you, to descan on the of a triumphane rival, unlets you discover, that their voluptions orgies have been corruptly interwoven with the calamaties of the Country.

Nor will it be tequired of you, to descant on the laxurious tables of the British Staff, although the great Frederick of Fressish has told us of an Emperor, who aferibed "the ignomination of the laxurious tables of the British Staff, although the great so fhis armies to the function," in ous defeats of his armies to the function, "the insulation of the base, and debitating habits, will cease of course, as soon as you have placed the Military Chiff of England under a regular mater-key!

I could even with, that it may not be found necessary for you, painfully to retrace the movements of our armies through their Flemis cannot from 1792, to affect and on which side the worful balance lies, between the prodigal expenditure of British blood, and British treasfore. I know of no public good to be drawn from the revisal of past discominates before the lines of Oftend, and Dunkins.

Although the mortal carnage of these scenes counts still open, becase the minds of Englishmen, liberal even in their indignation, have long since closed them, without the usual refervation of "error excepted!"

On looking straight before you, like plain, honest men, you will perceive the whole line of your duty very simply, and clearly delinear.

A. You will receive multifarious information as you proceed, from different quarters. The whole country is alive to the true object of the Enquire, and will, I have no doubt, yield you consideratial communications through various channels. I have, individually, some interesting materials for your confideration; but these

I must be allowed to lay before you publicly as the furer means, in my opinion, of promoting the public fervice. BELISARIUS.
