

DIEU

NUMBER 1350.

It was evidently the intention of Massena to have retreated by Coimbra through Vizeu on the right of the Mondego, but the vigorous pursuit and skilful manoeuvres of the English army forced him to abandon that intention and to take the less secure road on the left of the Mondego by the Pont de Murella.

There is one circumstance worthy of remark in the late retreat of Massena. Some people seen inclined to think, that it is altogether a Ruse de Guerre, and that Lord Wellington may find himself hampered in his rear or right flank, by an enemy advancing through the province of Alarcón; but it is presumed that if Masséna had been inclined to practise a stratagem of war in this instance, he would at all events, have chosen a route for his retreating army.

less exposed to the perils, difficulties, and disastrous consequences, which must inevitably attend a force that endeavours to penetrate through Beira Alta, by the road leading over the Pont de Murcella; and from Lord Wellington's own letters, it may be seen that he was compelled to take this road, which so far from being a route by which an enemy would think of marching, is not even noticed by those writers who have treated on the defence of Portugal.

The private accounts mention, that General

Besford had retaken Badajoz. From the Lisbon Gazette, it is clear that Badajoz was not retaken on the 25th of March, for a telegraph dispatch of that date from Elvas announces the evacuation of Campo Major and the retreat of the enemy to Badajoz. Lord Wellington says that Gen. Bessard will have

The following promotions were passed by the Prince Regent of Portugal, on the 13th of May 1811, being the anniversary of his Birth day.

Lord Willington, Marshal General of the Portuguese army and Commander in Chief of the Combined Armies to be Count of Vimeira, grand cross of the order of the Tower and Sword, with an annual pension of 20 thousand crowns for two lives.

Field Marshal Francisco de Silveira Pinto, to be Count of Amarante and Commander of Santa Marinha do Riofrio of the order of the Tower and the Sword.

Colonel Tant and Colonel Wilson to be Commanders of the order of the Tower and the Sword.
