His correspondent in London, is Baron De Imbert. Captain in the Youlon fleet in 1793, paid fince that time by England, and who districted this operation of General Dubbuc's, with Bertrand de Molleville, who figures in this correspondence under the name of Madame Chillet.

The last letter of Imbert, dated the 23d. March, is written with Sympathetic lask, and figued with the same into Delmbert.

I have the honour therefore to propose to your Excellency to order the trial of Pierre Paul Dubbuc, and Rofflin.

In consequence of the above, the Emperor decreed that they should be tried before a Military Committion. They were brough the form the Committion on the 31th, of Mar, and the public Accept state the following circumstances against them.

The ci-devours Baron D'Imbert was, in 1793, head of the Marine at Toulon; he is among those who forrendered that port to the English; he followed them when it was evacuated, and since that time has been in the pay of English; he followed them when it was evacuated, and since that time has been in the pay of English. He is at London the head of a kind of Committee or Ademblage of Toulonde refugees, whose number is about 500. These refugees are the most active spies of the English Ministers. The Ministers have often incuded to employ these refugees against France, and to fend them in small numbers through Spain. They remain, on attendant, as a disposable force, and since the destruction or submission of agree part of the Chouan Chiefs, Baron D'Imbert with his Toulones is to the English police whit Georges was with his failurs and Beton peafasts.

In the year 11, Resplain and Cocanjust were sent by Baron D'Imbert to the Spanish Coast to proceed to Bayonne, and from thenceto enter France as French merchants. But nothing a ble to obtain passiports at Bayonne, cley were going to Served her are submissed with the submission of the

The English Government was not embarassed at London with respect to the means to be employed to introduce these two Spies into Frauce. Dabne came from Pondiciberry; several other Frenchmen who were included in the capitual-tion were by the terms of that capitualistic to be carried to Frauce—Dabne & Raffelin were placed on the list of these prisoners, benbarked at Deal on board the Niss flag of truce, and landed at Morlaix.

Dabne did not produce the slightest sufficiency; and his rank as General in Chief, Agent with the Mabratus, and Ambassador from Tippos, made so stowards le ni impression on the Commission yat Morlaix, that the latter suspenses taken at Pondicherry, and not to be a French prisoner, enquired of Dabne—upon whose attestation is passport was made out for him togo to Marcilles through Paris.—Raffolin lost not a moment—he wished the adjacent coast, was at St. Malo, and went by Caen and St. German en Laye to Paris. We understand that orders have been issued for preparing 40,000 foot and 10,000 horse on the shortest notice. They are to act in the Continent.

Advices have been received at Petersburg, from M. Rasanow the Ambassador to Jopan. He had then had no audience of the Emperor, but had in other respects been well received. His presents had been accepted, and a return made. The troops under General Don in 135 transports arrived on the 16th, and 17th. November in the Wester and Elbe, and disembarked at Bremeriche and Stade, &c.

The French having very unexpectedly passed the Danube near Vienna, the whole of General Kutosow's army was exposed to the danger of being turned and totally destroyed. The corps commanded by Major General Prince Pangration was forrounded on all sides by the enemy. The most lively fatisfaction has been experienced at feeing that Prince arrive on the 19th. Inaut at the head quarters at Vischan, with fix thousand men under his command all in excellent order:—they were attacked on the 17th. by a French army of upwards of 50,000 men, commanded by General Mutzu, and several other Marshals. The engagement commenced by a heavy cannonade; Prince Pangration succeeded by means of some bombs to see fire to a village occupied by a corps of French troops that threatened his slank. The rapid progress of the slames compelled the enemy to abundon the village in order to save their tumbrils. This obliged them to make a circuitous route, which enabled Prince Pangration to gain about two hours of time. In the meantime the French army having sgain come up with him attacked him with vigour and forcededed several times in curting off small parties, but all their efforts proved ineffectual; the gallant Russian Troops forced their way with their bos oness.

The gallant Prince Pangration thus effected a long and panishlustreats, with a corps of 6000 men, in the face of 30,000 of the enemy's troops.

LONDON FASHIONS FOR NOVEMBER.

Fer Walking.—A bonnet of puce-coloured velvet, ornamented with ribbon of the fame; or a caravan hat of filver grey, or white beavet, with feather of the fame. Pelifie of purple, puce-coloured, of black velvet; muff and tippet of white ermine, mobair, or Habella bear. Velvet Besti to correspond with the colour of the pelific.

For fall Dreft,—Turban of filver mullin, with a pearl or diamond crefeent, and thort feather of filver or diamond wheat; a beautiful and novel head-drefs in form of a coronet, of filver tiffue, white fatin fpangled; or black velvet, is coming into vogue, and has a most elegant effect; white fatin velt formed as a corfect; petricoat of filver mullin, rather thort than otherwise, bordered with a wreath of fmull filver flowers; this dreft, graceful and light, is chiefly calculated for a ball. Long robe of filver mullin or pale blue taffeta, or purple with final gold fpangles, is efteemed most elegant for full drefts, with the petricoat already deferibed.

The fablion and cut of the dreftes remain nearly similar to what they have been for some time. Lace, since the paltry imitations have forming up; a left almost off by the higher classes, excepting occasionally some of an elegant species of French manufacture round the bottom of a drefts.—Diamonds, pearls, and brilliants, of every description, are worn—but brilliancy of complexion, we regret to add, continues in disrepute, the animated refe being bandhed the checks of our Belles, by the pale and deleterient lily.

We learned last night, from a respectable quarter, that Mr. Pin means to dissolve the Parliament. We should not be surpristed, however, if a coalition between Mr. Pin & the opposition were to prevent the uccessive of having recourse to such a measure. The moderate tone some time since assumed by the Opposition upon the Motion against Mr. Pin; gives some consistency to this idea.

It was reported last night that an account haben received by a Foreign Minister, that an attempt has been made to assistant Sonaparte by an Austriam Yosiu. Another person, mistaken by the assistant for Bonaparte, has been actually killed.
