ADDRESS TO OUR READERS.

ON THE COMPLETION OF THE TWENTY-SEVENTH VOLUME.

WHILE in the procurement of almost every species of enjoyment, either of body or mind, anticipation seems to be the general order of the day, we are happy to say, and without intending the least disparagement to any other publication, that we are not behind the best of our cotemporaries. The liberality of the Proprietors, who spare no consideration to enable them to extend and diversify the sources of Amusement and Information, it will be seen since our last, has been happily employed in enlarging the scale of our Intelligence peculiarly calculated for the Man of the Turf; and by anticipating a much larger portion of the Races to come, assist and direct him in his calculations; and thus, in a manner, to the past and the present unite the future.—But while other circumstances also increase the interest of this department of our work, we shall endeavour not to forget that there are likewise different sources of amusement and life which demand our attention.—From whatever hand any of their variegated sweets may be offered, to strew over the sombre paths, we shall never reject them. Preferring the more open walks of Nature, we desire nothing from Vice in its dark and secret recesses; and only wish to present our readers occasionally with fruits and flowers, equally free from the infectious germ of corruption, and the acute and rankling thorn of remorse.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

IN our next we shall present our Sporting Readers with a Correct Alphabetical List of every Horse of note that has run in England in the year 1805.

Ludus Ingenii in Templo Cloacinae, is rejected, and will most probably become a burnt-offering.

Jacky Bray's notes are too discordant for us.

Gentlemen disposed to favour the Publisher of this Magazine with Original Paintings of Sporting Subjects, are assured that the utmost care shall be taken of them and of their being safely returned. The Engravings thus taken, will be executed by the most approved Artists, and in the first style of excellence.

FOX HUNTING.

IN THE WEST OF ENGLAND.

THE Cattistock hounds a few days ago found a fox at Prince's-woods, which is supposed by Sportsmen to have ran over more ground than any animal they ever remembered. The fox broke cover at half an hour after ten, run for Holuest commons, Holm-bushes, Whitfield-woods, Lillington-common, to Thornford-hill and breaks, to the river close by Lenthay-green, through Honycomb-wood to Longburton, where he turned to Lewson-wood, through Whitfield-woods, to Yetminster and Leigh; thence over the new inclosures to Armitage, Prince's-woods, Grange-woods, to Revel's-Inn, where he was checked, and turned through Clinger to Mintern plantations, by Hookham and Hackham-woods, to Knowle, Buckland, Armshill, Melcombe-park, and Bull-Barrow, where the hounds were taken off by the huntsman, who with one other person had followed them from Armshill. The hounds were lively to the last; but not so the Sportsmen, who were obliged, after a chase of more than forty miles, in which hard running, and every variety of hunting was seen, to return from Armshill homewards with tired horses. It was nearly eight o'clock at night before the hounds could reach their kennel at Cattistock.

THE Marchioness of Salisbury's Foxhounds.—On Thursday, February 28, the Marchioness of Salisbury's hounds had a most capital day's sport. The fox was found at a cover called Bramingham, went away directly for Streatly, and thence for Sundon Holt; he then took the bottoms, leaving Silsoe to the right, and crossed the water betwixt Clowell and Wrest park; then made his way for Chicksend wood, which he went directly through without making a turn; then crossing to the Bedford road, at Deadman's cross, he made for Mr. Whitbread's park at Southill, skirted a part of it, and then went away for Warden; and from thence over some very heavy country as far as Shear Hatch wood, near to Muggerhanger, below Biggleswade, where he was killed in the most gallant style. The chase lasted more than two hours, exceeding hard running the whole time, without a check. Of seventy horsemen that were present at starting, there were only ten in at the death.

ROYAL CHASE.

ON Tuesday morning, the 26th ult. his Majesty's hounds were laid to a fine young deer, in the neighbourhood of Stoke, Buckinghamshire. His Royal Highness, the Duke of Cumberland, and about fifty gentlemen were present. The deer went off at great speed across Stoke common, through the woods and inclosures by Bulstrode, crossing the country to Cashio Berry Park, the seat of the Earl of Essex, &c. towards St. Alban's, where he made a double, a double, and was taken about five miles to the right of Watford, after three hours and a half hard running. The Duke of Cumberland followed the chase the whole time. Very few sportsmen were present when the deer was taken, most of the horses being knocked up.

PIGEON SHOOTING.

ON Wednesday, the 19th inst. a grand match took place between the Rev. Thomas Fielde, and Joseph Hankin, Esq. of Stanstead, for a rump, &c. which was won by the latter, and most luxuriously paid by the reverend gentleman.—Twenty pigeons were shot at, as follows:—

MR. FIELDE.	MR. HANKIN.
1st Shot..missed	4th Shot..killed
2d ditto..ditto	5th ditto..ditto
3d ditto..killed	6th ditto..ditto
7th ditto..missed	10th ditto..ditto
8th ditto..hit	11th ditto..ditto
9th ditto..killed	12th ditto..ditto
13th ditto..missed	16th ditto..ditto
14th ditto..killed	17th ditto..ditto
15th ditto..missed	18th ditto..ditto
19th ditto..hit	20th ditto..hit

A SHORT time since, four gentlemen of Camberwell undertook for a wager of five guineas a side, to shoot at twelve pigeons. Great bets were depending, as they were allowed to be good marksmen, but to the great mortification of the persons present they neither of them brought down a single bird.

A LEADER IN FASHIONABLE CARRIAGES.

MR. CHARLES P.....E.

THIS dashing charioteer sports an equipage truly unique.—His general set-out is deserving of the highest praise in respect to the cattle he drives, but the vehicles themselves are diametrically opposite to every established principle in the science of coach-building at the present period. His equipage consists of a barouche-landau and a phaeton. The first is formed of the most ponderous materials possible, being in weight literally six hundred pounds heavier than any one modern carriage now in use. The body of this far famed non-descript is painted a dingy yellow, picked out with black. It is made much upon the same plan as the one now in vogue, but its eccentricity is conspicuous by having affixed to the body a Salisbury budget, which is fourteen inches above the roof.—The perch of the carriage is unusually long, and very much compassed. Singularly large whip springs, and very low wheels, has destroyed the uniformity, and given an appearance to the body as if it were not at all connected with the carriage itself.

The phaeton partakes of all the leading defects of the former system, without having the smallest pretension to any of its merits. The body is painted an olive green, and the carriage a bright red. This vehicle is, without exception, one of the most outré and neck-breaking concerns which has ever been launched from a fashionable manufactory.—This tasteful article has the advantage of possessing a platform boot affixed on springs in the rear, which in size and appearance closely resembles a hearse or music machine, and the whole being made of vamped-up materials, the novel effect is lost even upon the vulgar.

To give a faithful finish to the general outline, it is necessary here to add, that the four horses Mr. P. drives, are bays and browns, namely, the near side wheel-horse, is a bright bright bay gelding with a long tail; the off-side one, is a brown with a nag-tail. The leaders of this precious group are a bay and a brown, with tails of the Leicestershire cut. The harness correspond with the heavy appearance of the carriages; but they have one advantage which few of the modern-fangled machines possess, they have very deep breechings, with large nose-pieces, and head-stall martingals. The traces are only three inches wide. Mr. P. has added to the housings and winkers ornamental decorations, representing the initials C. P. in Roman capitals, in size about six inches in circumference.

Mr. C. P. always appears in the Park on every Sunday gala, attended by two out-riders dressed in very rich liveries; the short man is mounted on a coach horse, and the other rides a Welsh poney.

A RAMBLE

Round Newport in the Isle of Wight.

A New Friend—Newport—Hunting the Lawyer—Mr. Davenport—A Speculator—The Squabble—The Gentle Character—Definition of a Gentleman, &c.

What's all the delegated power of kings
Lavish'd on folly, and the worst of things?
Tis the fit, drop the clouds of heav'n
distil,

On the foul mixen, or the barren hill:
One useful member of the mighty whole,
Reliev'd from misery's severe control,
Conveys more lustre to the regal state
Than realms bestow'd among the little great.

Reward for merit first was heav'n's design;
Who works the vineyard should partake
the wine.

A NEW FRIEND.

I WAS sitting at my breakfast-table, when a very respectable character entered the coffee-room, and turned him to read the London papers. I shewed him many marks of civility, and he returned my compliments with equal good manners. For some time our conversation ran on the politics of the day; and, as our opinions respecting the changes which of late had so chequered the world were nearly in unison, we presently became better acquainted; and he, in a manly way, inquired after my pursuits in the little island of Vecta.—I told him I had left my home in search of two very material objects towards the security of human happiness—good health, and rational society—the first I had recovered in an ample degree, the other I could not despair of obtaining, if I might judge from the good sense and politeness he had shewn towards a stranger. He thanked me for my favourable opinion, told me his name was Sharp; that he was proprietor of the flour mills at the east and western extremities of the town; and if I would do him the favour to dine with him at two, I should partake of a fine haunch of forest venison with his family, who would be also happy to shew me every attention in their power, so long as I might think proper to sojourn by the springs of Medina. This was a kindness too liberal to be rejected, and I cheerfully promised to be of his party. There is a silly hauteur in travellers who attach themselves too nicely to the etiquette of polite fashion, which in general precludes them from every source of information; so that, like the fool in the fable, who had fished all day and caught nothing, they return as empty as they went forth. To escape a predicament so unprofitable, I determined, when I left the metropolis, to become all things with all men who acted within the bounds of propriety; and from adhering to this resolution, I seldom went to my pillow without being satisfied with my own conduct, and improved by that of my neighbours. By these pursuits I was seldom long without a friend in a new place, and never without rational gratifications.

The hour arrived—Mr. Sharp met me by the way, and soon introduced me to his charming and accomplished family.—I am not enough of an epicure to recount the pleasures of the feast.—My new friend gave me a most hearty welcome, and after the covers were removed, proposed to accompany me in a walk round the town. This was a thing perfectly to my wishes, and we presently found ourselves in the streets of

NEWPORT,

A borough town of great antiquity, situated on a rising ground near the centre of the island; pleasantly ventilated by the western breezes, and so sheltered from the cold winds, as at all times to be found the best spot in all England for recovering an infirm constitution. To make Newport the more convenient for commercial concerns, it has the river Medina running close on its skirts; which, after sweetly meandering for five miles, meets the sea between East and West Cowes. Here is a custom-house, an ample quay, and every accommodation for landing all kinds of merchandise. The trade of the town is principally in flour and pulse, and the ships of many nations are constantly seen to adorn the port. Fish and flesh are here in great abundance, and the sweetest flavoured oysters to be found round the shores of Britain. The streets are spacious, well paved, perfectly clean, and of course wholesome; and what is rarely to be found in any other town, the eye is most agreeably entertained at every extremity with a rural termination.—On Saturday is a very valuable corn market, greatly frequented; and nothing can be more pleasing than to behold the vast string of waggons, drawn by stately teams of horses, into the town of Newport on a market day. Most of the grain produced in this island is bought up by merchants for distant markets; the rest by the inhabitants, of which they make the best biscuits to supply the navies of England. The poultry is both plentiful and good, and a prime fowl, in these dear times, may be had for two shillings, and every article for food in equal proportion. The women are beautiful to a proverb—

An island maid without her bodice
Shall equal any Grecian Goddess.

And this advantage is by no means confined to a few; wherever I turn myself they are all alike charming.

Nature has here been so equal in the distribution of her favours, that could the Idalian shepherd leave his mountain to decide on the pre-eminence of beauty, he would be greatly at a loss where to present the auriferous apple. The inhabitants are remarkably attentive to strangers, and most neighbourly among themselves; insomuch that a professional lawyer might as well expect to grow fat on the top of Plinlimmon as to succeed in the town of Newport.

I some months ago sent you a prosaic account of the ceremony called the Burning Shame, or hunting the Lawyer, practised in this island in the reign of Queen Elizabeth—(see our Magazine for May, 1803,) now accept some poetical strictures on the same subject:—

Away he flies, the torches flaming round,
While from their hills the eager rustics bound;
From out the borough ev'ry calling came,
And follow, gladsome, to the Burning Shame,
Ox-bones and cleavers butchers loud ring,
Their brazen kettles sooty tinkers bring:
The gelder's horn loud echoes through the space,
Millers and meal-men join the jovial chase.
Boys, girls, and women, skip along the way,
And, as the tale is told, the ag'd look gay.
Seamen and fishers blend the gen'ral strain,
And turn their sav'ry quids, and shout amain;
The lame, the blind, exulting, hobble nigh,
And send their grateful songs to meet the sky;
While those his craft deceiv'd, o'erjoy'd, pursue,
Till the wide Forest-gate admits him through.
The midway hamlets from their quiet rouse,
And follow up the Burning Shame to Cowes.

The

The flood he seeks, the torches soon expire,
 And with them quench, as soon, Hantonian ire;
 Qui mounts a boat, nor dissipates his dread,
 Till in Southampton town reclines his head.
 The throng return, exulting all the way,
 And Newport traders make a holiday;
 O'er cheering bowls, the arch deceiver fled,
 They vow to be no more by law misled.
 Content and happiness once more are seen,
 And where lurk'd terrors all is now serene.
 The ploughman turns his furrow with delight,
 The fishers warble o'er their cans at night;
 And ev'ry miller o'er his home-brew'd ale,
 Laughs, as the hunted lawyer swells the tale;
 Down sinks the moon, as men retrace the green,
 They praise the Governor, and bless the Queen.
 From that blest day no lawman dare beguile,
 Or break the peace of Vecta's happy isle.

"We have in this town of Newport" said my friend the miller, "a very ingenious marine painter; the best judgment has been employed on his performances, and the connoisseurs have spoken well of his pictures; but alas! here are very few who have taste to covet his productions, or leisure to listen to his claims upon liberality. The man is perfectly industrious, and indeed—continued the humane Sharp—he has cause to be so; for the painter has a wife and ten children, slowly rising one mouth above another, like so many pipes in an organ case. In America these would be considered as so many acquisitions towards making a man's fortune; in England, I am sorry to say it, every child is an additional millstone about a poor man's neck, and only serves to bend his body nearer to the groundsel of his humble habitation."

I requested to be better acquainted with this son of ingenuity and adversity, when my guide cheerfully led me to the house of

MR. DAVENPORT.

His children came fluttering around us like wanton may-flies about a blooming hawthorn-bush, and turning up their pretty smiling faces, fresh and brilliant as a bed of spring flowers put in motion by the breezes; when the father, at the request of the miller, shewed his best sketches and his last picture.

Davenport had not been the pupil of Dominic Serres, marine painter to the King, nor had he at any time received instructions from the descriptive Paton, or studied the works of Vanderweld, or any of the Flemish school.—No! Davenport had not any of these advantages; but our painter had correctly studied Nature; he had unfolded her large book, and had presumed to copy her best works, without consulting any other master; and for this he was called by certain rule-taught blockheads, with the sneer of envy, "The self-taught Genius." Surely there must be more merit in one man who becomes a proficient in any art or science by his own application, than in another of the same ability who has had all the advantages of the schools, and of the settled judgment of profound professors.—Let none, then, insult the self-taught Genius, because he found the way to the temple of his fame without a guide, and by a rugged path, that can only be trod by good sense, true genius, and industry.

We had now seen the painter's collection, which he modestly observed were barely worth our attention; when Davenport assured us, that except to one man who speculated in his performances, he seldom sold a picture; that this broker took his works off his hands at a very low price, and having disposed of them over-land, employed him again; but frequently several months elapsed between the sale and the fresh order, so that to fill up the chasm, he was forced for subsistence to daub a post, colour a pannel, a cart, or a pig-sty. After this kind of unpleasant information, and respecting the little family in a proper way, we left the son of Apollo, with a hearty wish for his speedy emancipation. This cruel neglect of merit has shortened the existence of many an ingenious member of society: many a man of literary talent has felt the power of neglect; and the merit of many a painter has been fairly estimated only as the cold hand of death stopped the pulsation of the heart for ever!—Then ten thousand tongues have become clamorous in his praise; and, what is still more ridiculous—those who denied him Bread while living, have, when dead, bountifully subscribed for him "A Stone!"

But the man who grew wealthy on his ability has not even been of this party; he has to the last moment shewn himself

A SPECULATOR;

A nuisance but little known, and less attended to, though of all traders the last to be respected. This mercenary greedily seeks out, and buys up the productions of the improvident or depressed artist, just paying him for his labours above the starving price, till his cabinet is increased to a valuable collection; and then—like the filthy crow, or hungry raven over a dying horse—the speculator waits impatiently the expiring moments of the being who is to improve his fortune. The time arrives; the dissolution gone by, the speculator rejoices; with unfeeling rapture he surveys the amount of his providence, and determines to sell every inch of that canvas for which he paid a penny, for at least a pound. This truth was perfectly exemplified in the conduct of a modern speculator, who had the unblushing effrontery to demand, and absolutely received, for a picture of poor George Morland's, a hundred guineas sterling, obtained by this liberal speculator in the moments of the painter's misery for the paucity sum of five guineas; and of this deed, with many others of the same stamp, he still boasts over his pipe and his pot with the highest exultation; thus

Every man of sorrow is the scoundrel's jest.

THE SQUABBLE.

Almost every animal in domestic life improves upon the hand of its instructor but man. When the majestic horse becomes acquainted with the menage, he not only retains the principles taught by the master, but delights also to shew them with improved graces. The dog, when properly broken to the duties required of him by the sportsman, seldom fails to shew his good breeding in the field, for which he was intended.—Even the poor ass, most sluggish of the quadrupeds, forgets not his task in the wheel at the well, but pursues his dull routine with an exactitude that constantly ensures him the approbation of his master; while man, a being intended for the upper walks of nature, no sooner quits the school of his studies than he becomes a new creature, for nine times in ten he assumes a character that at once makes us doubt his education and his rationality.

My companion the kind miller, and myself, had just entered the parlour at the Bugle in Newport, when we were greatly alarmed at the

the conduct of a young sprig of fashion, who rudely burst into the drinking-room with his noisy associates. Several respectable tradesmen of the town were enjoying themselves after the fatigues of the corn-market, and the place was unavoidably clouded with the effluence of tobacco; when instead of these intruders retiring, as they were requested, to another apartment, they began to utter the most abominable execrations against smokers of every description, and lamented that pipe-breaking was not the order of the day, that they might set the example and turn every del Fuego into the market-place, to stink with their relatives the swine. An old farmer observed, that the young man's father, Sir John B...., delighted in a pipe of tobacco as well as any man in England; and had graceless dared to say as much in the good baronet's presence, he had been well corrected with a horse-whip. The young buck finding himself recognised by the farmer, answered—they were all gentlemen, and not to be reflected on by such plebeian rascals; upset the tables in their retreat, and flew hollowing towards Carisbrook.

The conduct of these young men threw me into a train of reflections, and the next morning I found on my tablet the following remarks on

THE GENTLE CHARACTER.

I have sometimes thought on the gentle character, and the more I have examined the constituent points insisted on by the officials of the high court of honour, the more I have been inclined to discredit such pride-bottled stuff; and have set it down as an axiom, that the world has been too long abused with such ridiculous nonsense.

Elias Ashmole in his great book of "Much Ado about Nothing," has gone farther respecting this subject than the rest of his brethren; and he plumes himself upon his opinions being drawn from the clearest fountains. "To be a gentleman, he must" says friend Elias, "be a gentleman by Name, by Arms, and by Blood;" and he thus proceeds to define his positions. "A gentleman of Blood is one descended of three noble descents of Name and Arms, both by father and mother. It is certain" continues Elias, "gentility doth not receive its perfection in the person it was first devolved on, but is completed by succession; for among the Romans, though the father was free-born, and of the equestrian order, yet it was farther requisite that the grand father should be the same, or else they could not obtain the Ring, one of the symbols of that order. Thus gentility has its beginning in the grand-father, its increase in the father, and full ripeness in the son; consequently, in the constitution of gentility, the father and grand-father conveying a lustre to the son, make gentility entire and complete." Now, I who sometimes presume to think for myself, deny all these positions; yes, even to the very tabard of the first King at Arms attended by all his pursuivants.—

What's in the whistle of an ancient name?
It adds no feathers to the wings of Fame!

And though my fathers upon record bear many eagles in their escutcheons, yet it gives me no claim to the gentle character—

The fame of families is all a cheat:
The truly virtuous are the only great,

Says Daniel De Foe; and I think this sentiment comes nearer the gentle character than the fine-spun nonsense of my friend Elias, though backed by all his statutes of the garter. So much for Name and Arms:

Arms: As for Blood, which I conceive if possible to be more ridiculous than all the rest—

What can ennoble fools and cowards?
Not all the blood of all the Howards.

Yet beings of this presumptuous description, like the young baronet, we meet every day, who can prove their descent from the Norman conquest, and, in reality, possess less of the gentle character than a humane nurse in a public hospital.

But lest I should be accused of declaiming against poor Elias without throwing a light on my subject, permit me to conclude with my own

DEFINITION OF A GENTLEMAN.

Tell me, Amilcar, if you can,
What constitutes the Gentleman?
A name that often meets the ear
When Things scarce worth a name appear.—

Is it to dress the body gay
In all the fashions of to day?
To skip, a smirking essenc'd beau?
Tell me, Amilcar, is it?—"No."

Is it to hold as great a store
As that which Gualpha* found of yore,
When on Potosi's bushy side
La Rica's† treasure he descried?
Is it to hold a land estate?
Or be related to the great?
Tell me, Amilcar, is it so?
Hark to the sage's answer—"No."

Is it to own a blazon'd coat,
Brought down from folks of ancient note;
Of whom the heralds thus report—
They beat their foes at Agincourt?
Or is it to be high in place,
A county Sheriff, or His Grace,
Lord Mayor, or Common Council beau?
Say, good Amilcar, is it?—"No."

Is it with ease to bow the frame?
For prowess to be known to fame?
To wear the Garter and the Star?
Or grace the senate or the bar?

Is it to be y'clep'd Esquire?
Or be Receiver for a Shire?
Do these the fair pretension show?
Tell me, Amilcar, do they?—"No."

Is it to mount the steed with grace,
And be the leader in the chase?
Pride of the turf, by lords caress'd,
And on the horse-course always best?
To gain, by play, a greater lot
Than Carlisle lost to Gen'l Scott?
Is it the greatest skill to show
In throwing dice?—you answer—"No."

Is it the mitre and the scarf?
The robe of ermine? Marshal's staff?
Chanc'lor's baubles, and his mace?
Gold-stick in waiting?—charming place!
Is it to wear, by Majesty,
The pendant George, or treas'ry key?
Can these the gentle name bestow?
Still, still Amilcar answers—"No."

Is it to scorn an act that's mean?
Or speak falacious or obscene?
To render all the good we can
To our poor fellow-creature, man?
To honour God, to serve the state,
To rev'rence all that's good and great?
To succour science, arts restore?
Tell me, Amilcar, is it?—"More."

Is it—where virtue pines unseen,
Too modest to obtrude her mien—
To bring the wretched to the light,
And wipe off slander's venom'd spite?
Unheeding envy, to make known
Neglected merit to the throne;
Till Plenty, at her cheerful door,
Relieves the friendless?—"Still 'tis more."

To offer none unjust offence?
To side with helpless innocence?
With wealth and pow'r—if blest with these—
To right the wrong'd of all degrees?
Whatever justice spurns, to hate,
And to reclaim the reprobate,
And such as, heedless, do amiss?
Be brief, Amilcar, is it?—"Yes."

Go, Fop, pursue this little plan,
And you'll become the Gentleman,

SCOTCH

SCOTCH ECONOMY.

IN a late trial before the Recorder of Dublin, it appeared that a soldier, named Allan M'Intire, had been robbed of £14, by Donald M'Leod and Catharine Toole. The Reporter remarks, that the prisoner—M'Leod—and the prosecutor, by their dialect, seemed to be Scotsmen, which he observes "accounts for the probability of the latter possessing such a property as £14."

This reminds us of an anecdote well worth relating. The colonel of a marching regiment was in company with the colonel of a Highland regiment, and was boasting that His Majesty had not in his service a more orderly and prudent set of men than those he had the honour to command. The Highland officer was far from denying the justice of the encomium; but, said he, I think you will be obliged to allow that my Scotsmen are not only as orderly and well behaved as yours, but are, generally speaking, more prudent than any soldiers on the face of the earth, and, as a proof of it, I will bet you a dinner and a dozen of wine that if we go out together, I will ask the first three men I meet belonging to my regiment to lend me five guineas, and immediately obtain the money. The other officer laughed at such an idea.—Three common soldiers, and highlandmen too, to possess five guineas, appeared to him as impossible as any thing against the ordinary course of Nature. The wager was accepted—they went out. They soon met a hero of the broad-sword; the colonel told him he had come out without his money, and desired him to lend him five guineas.—"Gud will I, Sir, wi a' my heart," replied Sawney, and forthwith produced the Geordies. He went to another, and accosting him in the same manner, got the money; he applied to a third—"Dee'l tak' me, Colonel," said the Scot, "I hae but four guineas and a half, and some siller in my pouch; but I'll gang hame and get some mair in the twinklin' o' my een."—The English officer was amazed, but still more so when the Scots colonel offered to lay the same bet, that there was not half a dozen men in the whole regiment who were not equally opulent. After such a circumstance as this, the conclusion seems to be very natural, that a soldier possessing £14 must have been a Scotsman.

KILL DEVIL.

HE was got by that well-bred and uncommon racer Rockingham; his dam, Nelly, by Postmaster, (a son of Herod); grandam Mr. Shafto's Rosebud, by Snap; great grandam, Miss Belsea, (own sister to Fribble, Angelica, Curiosity, and Snapdragon's dam) by Regulus; great great grandam, (Squirrel, Midge, Thwackum, and Camilla's dam) by Bartlett's Childers; great great great grandam, (own sister to the two True Blues) by Gen. Thornton's Louisa, by Pegasus, who Mrs. Thornton rode against Mr. Buckle, at the last York August Meeting, for a Gold Cup, value 700 guineas.—Little Devil was a good runner: He won seven times in 1796; seven times in 1797; and twice twice in 1798; after which he was put out of training.

PERFORMANCES.

At Chester, May 5, 1800, KILL DEVIL, (three years old) started against Collector, Robin Redbreast, Dick Andrews, &c. but fell in running:—On the 7th, He ran three heats against Baron Nile; beating Vanguard; Ticker, and Mrs. Jordan:—And on the 9th, He started against Duncan, &c. when he ran off the Course, owing to his being rode by a Boy of feather weight, who could not govern him.

At Bridgenorth, June 18, He was beat by Alfred, owing to his being again master of his rider:—On the next day, He won a Sweepstakes of 90gs, two miles, beating Heart's-Ease, 4 years old; and George, aged.

At Nantwich, July 9, at 7st 3lb, He won 50l. for three and four yr olds, beating Essence, 4 years old, 8st 3lb; Vanguard, 4 years old, 8st 3lb; Heart's-Ease, 4 years old, 8st 6lb; and Mr. Artley's sister to Duchess, 3 years old, 6st 12lb.

At Hereford, August 27, KILL DEVIL, (a feather) won 50l. four mile heats, distancing Betty Brampton, 4 years old, 7st 7lb:—On the following day, at 7st 5lb, He won 50l. two mile heats, beating Victoria, 4 years old, 8st 4lb, who won the 50l. Plate the next day.

At Lichfield, Sept. 9, He started against Baron Nile, Robin Red-breast, Dick Andrews, &c. when he ran out of the Course.

At Shrewsbury, Sept. 16, He walked over for a Sweepstakes of 10gs each, (4 Subscribers):—On the 18th, at 8st, He won 50l. two mile heats, beating Heart's-Ease, 4 years old, 8st 10lb.

At Northampton, Sept. 23, at 8st 9lb, He was beat, at three heats, by Beelzebub, by Rockingham, 8st 5lb, for the three years old Plate of 50l. one mile and a half heats; beating Wowski, 8st 3lb; and Miss Totteridge, 8st 7lb.—The first heat was deemed a dead one between Kill Devil and Miss Totteridge; and he was beat with great difficulty for the third heat.

At Newmarket, October 1, He won the Perram Plate of 80l. for three years old colts, 8st 7lb, fillies 8st 3lb, Ditch-in, beating First Fruits, Surprise, Canary, and Scrub:—6 to 5 on First Fruits, 5 to 1 against Surprise, 5 to 1 agst Scrub, and 6 and 7 to 1 agst Kill Devil.

At the Newmarket First Spring Meeting, 1801, He won the Subscription-Plate of 50l. for all ages; three year olds, 7st 4lb, D. C. beating very easy Dick Andrews, 3 yrs old; Richmond, 3 years old; Tag, 3 years old; and Jack-a-Lantern, 3 years old;—6 to 4 on Tag, 7 to 4 agst Dick Andrews, and 4 to 1 agst Kill Devil. At Epsom, May 20, at 7st 8lb, He won 50l. three mile heats, beating Sacripant, 4 years old, 7st 8lb; and Trifle, 6 years old, 8st 13lb.—4 to 1 on Kill Devil. He afterwards fell lame, and was put out of training. He started only once besides the above, when he was beat for the Oatlands' Stakes by Chippenham, Surprise, and Expectation, beating Dion, Stamford, Robin Redbreast, Telegraph, Humbug, &c. in the Craven Meeting, 1801.

Several

Several bets were depending upon Kill Devil's winning TEN times in the year 1800, which he accomplished by winning the Perram Plate at Newmarket, the only free Plate not run for that season in the South and West of England:—He travelled in England and Wales that year, 1500 miles, though only three years old, a Performance that was never equalled by any horse, &c. whatever in the annals of the Turf.

KILL DEVIL is a horse of uncommon strength, with great bone; and from his blood and racing performances stands as high in estimation, with those conversant in breeding, to get capital runners, not only for speed but lastingness, as any untied Stallion in the kingdom.

He covers at Barham-Wood, near Edgware, Middlesex, (the same place as Ambrosio) at 10gs and 10s. 6d.—See the Sporting Magazine for November, page 91.

LIBEL ON THE BLUES.

Court of King's Bench, February 3.

THE KING v. GOLDBURN, ESQ.

THE defendant was brought into Court to receive judgment for a libel, in a satirical poem, called "The Blueviad," in which the officers of the regiment of Blues—in which the defendant was a cornet—were severely ridiculed, and for which he was convicted upon three indictments.

Affidavits were read in the defendant's behalf; his own among them stated a variety of circumstances; the leading ones were, that at the age of sixteen he had a cornetcy purchased for him, and he joined this regiment; that while he was at Canterbury he improvidently contracted debts with his brother officers, and also several tradesmen, which he was unable to pay; that his elder brother, a man of fortune, joined him in becoming responsible for these debts, the defendant himself having his affairs in Chancery, and the accumulation of his fortune during his minority not being yet relieved; that in this situation he had some reason to apprehend, that some of the officers of the regiment, and particularly the Colonel, had given him some cause for complaint, taking notice of the levity of his youth, and saying he would come to the gallows, which was language he did not think becoming for a gentleman to use, nor fit for him to endure, having the honour to be, as he was, allied to noble families; that under these impressions, he composed, when under the age of seventeen, some of these poems, and read them at the mess, where they were approved of, and the applause which they met with flattered him too much; and that, together with the irritation into which his temper was thrown, were the principal causes of his having published these poems in a book after he had quitted the regiment, which he did, in consequence of these differences. He was sensible of the impropriety of the publication, and was extremely sorry for it.

His solicitor had offered to make an apology to the prosecutors.

Mr. Serjeant Best addressed the Court for the defendant, and Mr. Erskine for the prosecution. The defendant was committed to the prison of the Court, and ordered to be brought up for judgment on the Monday following.

The defendant being accordingly brought up on the 10th of February, to receive the sentence of the Court,

Court, Mr. Justice Grose, in pronouncing judgment, addressed him in the following terms:—

"You, Edward Goldburn, have been prosecuted upon three indictments, charging you with publishing libels against different persons; which charges, although they might have been contained in one record, yet the parties have chosen severally to prosecute upon the libels against themselves respectively, and upon such prosecutions you have been found guilty. This is only one of the many inconveniences which must inevitably result from writing the malicious libel complained of; a libel against those gentlemen, with whom, from your peculiar situation and connection, we should have most naturally supposed you would have cultivated friendship and esteem. Upon the perusal of the libel, to what can we impute its origin? I am sorry to say so, but it must have arisen from deep-rooted malice. You have vilified Mrs. Bird, by terming her a pupil of Satan, and a shameless harriidan. Mr. Bird is slandered, by your imputing to him that he purchased unsound horses, and then sold them to ignorant unwary young men, under a warranty. Besides this he is ridiculed for his provincial dialect; and lastly, both of them are stiled wide-wasting pests, and a demoniac pair. You represent Lieutenant Colonel Dorrien as affecting a mathematical knowledge, to which he had no pretensions: his dress and mode of dancing are likewise touched upon, and in the conclusion, he is said to be "too old to learn, too obstinate to mend." The libel for which you have been prosecuted by John Anstey Abney, terms him "a numskull, and a rude unpolished bear."—The tendency of the libel is too obvious to admit of a doubt. In mitigation of your offence, affidavits have been produced, which cannot fail to receive the attention of the Court.—At the time you wrote the libel, you had too little foresight to discover how many enemies such a publication might create, and how few friends your satire would produce, and into what difficulties it might involve you. The libel contains such a picture of inveterate malice, as we could scarcely have thought even men in advanced years, much less boys, would have been able to lay before the world. The lady had not injured you by selling you unsound horses, or had encouraged you at the mess-table, by applauding the libels upon the characters of others. On examining your affidavits, which stand uncontradicted by the prosecutors, and considering your extreme youth, we cannot but think the prosecutors have been much to blame. Although it is a necessary part of our public duty, in this place, to punish delinquents, we cannot at the same time avoid censuring the unwarrantable and harsh conduct of those who, conversant with the ways of the world, first led you, by flattering your slanderous publications, to commit an offence against the laws of the country, and then brought you before this Court, to render you amenable to those laws. Attending to every circumstance in your case, to the conduct of the prosecutors, and to the time you have already been confined, we do order and adjudge, that for the libel against Mr. and Mrs. Bird, you forfeit the sum of £30; for that against Lieutenant-Col. Dorrien, £10; and that you do farther pay to his Majesty £10, for the libel against Captain Abney; and that you be imprisoned till the several fines be paid.

The defendant immediately discharged the fines, and retired.

LOVE & NATURE TRIUMPHANT.

A

Satirical Tale of the Nineteenth Century; interspersed with Original Poetry. By Henrico Fernandez Glysticus, LL. D.
In Three Volumes.

How oft, when press'd to marriage, have I said,
Curses on all laws but those which Love has made!

WHEN we gave some time ago, a long detail of the affair between the celebrated Mrs. Lee and the Gordons, we of course had not the idea of its being wrought up in the form of an interesting novel. The man of the world, generally called a man of enterprise and spirit, may in this novel trace the whole progress of the art of intrigue through all its stages, from an accidental meeting at a ball to its consummation.—And if he prefers the safer method of carrying female virtue by sap, rather than by assault, he will find an admirable master in the character of Mr. Ince, and his connexions with Katty, the mother of the heroine of the piece.—He will also find the situations interesting and well chosen, and the dénouement of the piece gradually and pleasantly unfolding itself.—If the colouring is deemed sometimes high and vivid, there is nothing outré.—If at any time even a congestion of purient matter seems to be forming, the incision-knife of satire is immediately at hand, to eventilate the humours that might otherwise predominate at the expence of good manners.—The libertine might possibly plume himself in putting such a production into the hands of a female whom he would interest in his favour; but vain and short-lived indeed would be the effects of his triumph, if her reflection dwelt but for a few moments upon the ultimate consequences of the situations here described. Placed in an exact medium between ice and fire; there must be certainly some internal pre-existing motive to incline the object to either: the application to this novel is easy.—As the whole of the story would lead us beyond our limits in the present number, we must content ourselves with an extract from some of the various digressions or episodes, merely to give our readers an idea of the author's talents in the comic. But for more of this, as well as the serious, which is admirable in its kind, we shall most probably draw upon him much more liberally in a future number. The following extract, in page 266 of the first volume, describes an interview between Mrs. M'Guggery, the mother of Katty, who is seduced, and Mr. Fizzig, an itinerant preacher in Ireland—

"Good morrow to ye, children of Christ," said he as he entered.—

"Mrs. M'Guggery, I could not resist the temptation of just calling in as I passed by your door."

"Ah, Mr. Fizzig, need I now by my soul, say that you are welcome! Have you breakfasted Mr. Fizzig, because if you hav'n't, Katty can soon make the kettle to boil, and I'll make you a bit of toast myself."

"Worthy Madam, I thank you! Ah, the Lord giveth, and the Lord taketh away!"

"Ough—ough—Mr. Fizzig—I say thank you—but give me the tea-spoon back again—or else by Jasus the Lord will take and not give!"

"Christ's mercy defend me," exclaimed the holy man. "If I had'n't got the tea-spoon in my pocket!"

Mr. Fizzig hat sat down next the breakfast-table, and laid his hand by

by accident upon a silver tea-spoon which lay there; accidentally while talking he took it up, and had it not been for Mrs. M'Guggery, he would certainly have carried it away by mere accident!

"By the blessed influence of Almighty God, I knew not that I had it: my mind was abstracted from the things of this world, and my corporeal agencies acted without my consent."

"Ah by Jasus! and he was well drubbed for it too."

"Who, Christian sister?"

"Why Corporal Aginsis, of the Militia—Didn't he hook'em snivy you while you was parsonifying; and didn't he take up a lump of two-years old, and let fly at your bread-basket?"

"Ah, holy child! but you misapprehend me! The blessing of the Lord be upon you, but I said my corporeal agencies; that is, the functions of my dirty, groveling, flesh-like body, did act without permission from my mind."

"By the Holy, I ask your pardon."

"Ah, Madam, you're a precious woman——"

"O Christ! Come now, don't palaver me! How does Mrs. Fizzig do?"

The reader should here be informed, that our holy man of a holy sect, was married, and kept a shop—yea, a chandler's shop!

"Merciful Heaven! look down upon a heart-broken wretch, whose sorrows are multiplied? Ah Madam! Mrs. Fizzig has gig'd me out of all my comfort and all my joys! But the Lord giveth and the Lord taketh away, and sinful are they who repine!"

"By Jasus now, what do you mean? Arrah now let me know, or I shall be dying for curiosity."

"Oh, Mrs. M'Guggery! if Mrs. Fizzig had but a heart like you—— but the just are rewarded in another world, and we shall all have our deserts there."

"But what of Mrs. Fizzig?"

"Madam, she has turned a very scold, and lets me have no comfort, no peace, no happiness, no pleasure!—I fag night and day for her; but it's always the same, and there's no variation, and there's no end; so the Lord be blessed—Amen!"

"Christ and his angels! who would have thought it! All the neighbourhood were so bepraising her, that, by the Holy, I thought you'd hit upon the true one at last!"

"Ah, Ma'am, so she was at first! But women are like the devil's weathercock, they soon change, and then always blow the wrong way! The Lord knoweth, and I knows, that when I first married her we were like two turtles, so loving; always a cooing and billing; but now we are like two tom cats, always fighting and scratching. But Heaven's will be done—and my trust is in the Lord!"

"Ah! there's no saying how things may happen in this world!"

"The Lord bless thee, sweet angel," said he, turning to Katty, "he advised by one whom experience has taught, and never marry."

"I will not," replied Katty, whose mind was dwelling upon her intended elopement.

"Oh, by Jasus, it's better wed than burn, as St. Paul said," exclaimed Mrs. Moggy; and immediately replenished her nose with some true blackguard.

"St. Paul, Madam, was a man of this world, or he would never have said such an abominable thing—his soul was'n't purified! But, Ma'am, I have burnt horribly since I have been married! None but those

"those who have tried it can form any idea of the purgatory——"

"Ah, it has been your lot, Mr. Fizgig, to meet with a devil, and then no wonder that you burned.—But what do you intend to do?"

"Oh, Madam, I know not! We should live in charity with all mankind, and Christ has set us an example not to be vindictive. I would gladly sojourn with my dear rib, could I but be comfortable! but she makes game of me, and laughs at me when I go to preach to her!—Do you know, Ma'am, that last night, while she was broiling some kidneys for supper, I attempted to convert her to mildness; and no sooner had I said "Dear Mrs. Fizgig, let nothing but mildness issue from thy mouth," than she spit in my face, and said, "there—that's as mild as mother's milk."

"Oh, that was monstrous! By Jasus, an impudent baggage, had I been you, Mr. Fizgig, I'd have knocked her down."

"I did, Ma'am, but I was forced to run out of the house immediately afterwards! and I slept all night at the Cock and Bladder, and paid a shilling!"

"Vartuous man!——Oh the b—h, how I'd have drubb'd her!"

"Ah Ma'am, but as the jack-ass driver said, there's two can play at that game.—Alas! I'm like the Apostles of our blessed Lord! They were persecuted, and so am I.—But blessed be the name of the Lord!"

"And so you never intend to go back?"

"Alas, I fear I cannot! This morning, as soon as dawn, I arose, and having knelt before the Lord and paid my duties there, I sat myself down and wrote some Poetry. Poetry, you know, is a great mover of the passions; and mayhap, as the verses are addressed to Mrs.

VOL. XXVII. No. 162.

Fizgig, she may relent on reading them."

"Oh my dear Fizgig," exclaimed Katty, with unusual vivacity, "now do pray let us hear them: I'm sure they must be beautiful."

"Ah, Madam, you know the poet says—

"Slow comes the verse that real grief inspires—
What mourner ever felt poetic fires?"

Alas! I'm a sinful mourner!"

"I am sure," continued Katty, "they must be good! I hope now you won't refuse me, for it is not often I ask a favour."

"Lord bless thy little cherub face, you shall hear them! Ah Miss! had I a wife like you, how should I glorify and magnify the name of the Lord! You see, Madam," he continued, addressing himself to Mrs. Moggy M'Guggery, "you see, Madam, I thought I could better set forth my sorrows in verse than in prose; so I took pen, ink, and paper, and while tears of godliness rolled down my cheeks, I wrote as follows:—

A SUBLIME MONODY,

Addressed to Mrs. Fidget Fizgig.—Written by her Husband on a real occasion.

"Although you've us'd me very ill,
And never keep your red-rag still,
Yet so keen—Oh, how keen—are the wounds you inflict,
That sooner than be scolded, I would rather be kick'd;
Oh! how can you put my heart to such trouble,
And make all the blood in my body to bubble!

"Ah Madam, that's a beautiful stanza! Do you perceive how prettily bubble and trouble run over the tongue?"

"It's mighty affecting," replied Mrs. Moggy, "pray go on."

Rr

"When

"When I married you at first,
If I didn't love you may I be curst!
And though you us'd Scotch snuff and chew'd tobacco,
Yet to these predilections I never said
No:—

Then how can you put my heart to such trouble,
And make all the blood in my bosom
to bubble.

"Christ!" exclaim'd Mrs. M'Guggery, "if that doesn't move her, she must have a heart of stone. What do you say, Katty?"

"Oh, it is pathetic!" she replied with difficulty, for laughter was the only emotion she felt, and that emotion she was anxious to conceal.

"But now comes the most tender and affecting part."—

"Can I ever forget the dire disgrace
Of last night, when you spit in my face?

Oh no! I've made up my mind to see you no more,

So—take off my name from off the street-door!

For you always do put my heart to such trouble,

And make all the blood in my bosom to bubble.

Here Mrs. M'Guggery and Mr. Fizgig gave themselves up to the tender influence of grief. They both bellowed forth their sorrows with audible energy, while Katty hid her face in her handkerchief, and bit her lips almost through to prevent herself from laughing out. After a short sacrifice to sympathy, Mr. Fizgig thus continued:—

"This I hope will melt her."

"Melt her!" vociferated Mrs. Moggy; "by Jasus, and if such verses were written to me, if I shouldn't blubber like a red cow, don't tell me my name's Mrs. Moggy M'Guggery."

"Feeling creature!" replied Mr. Fizgig; "how few are born with hearts like you! Perhaps when she reads that line, wherein I say—"I've made up my mind to see you no more!" and the exquisitely pathetic one that follows, she will relent; at least if God has not forsaken her."

A loud knock at the door now announced the arrival of Mr. Ince. Katty felt the warm blood rush into her face, and her feelings almost overpowered her. Confusion was evident in every lineament of her countenance, and she hurried out of the room, that she might be more composed ere she encountered Mr. Ince.

As soon as he entered, Mrs. Moggy introduced Mr. Fizgig to him as a clerical character, and expressed her hope that they would find each other congenial in their sentiments. A reader perusing the character given of Mr. Ince in page 40 of this work, will easily believe that it would not be very difficult for him to accommodate himself even to a canting methodist; nor in fact was it; for after a very short time he had completely fallen in with his strain of sentiment, and played off with admirable eclat a few pious expressions and holy exhortations. Mr. Fizgig was enraptured with him, and most pathetically lamented that he had never attempted to get a congregation; for he thought that he would make a most divine preacher.

"It is a thing," said Mr. Ince, with characteristic subtlety, "to which I have often turned my attention: indeed I was at one time an enthusiast, and used to exhort my companions in coffee-houses. But you, my good Sir," he continued, addressing himself to Mr. Fizgig, "can tell how hard it is to convert the ungodly."

"Most true, I can! But the servants of the Lord should endure mortification, and be humbled!"

"Divine

"Divine idea!" exclaimed Mr. Ince. "Oh, Sir, what would I have given had I known you earlier. How much might we have done together! In brotherly union we should have toiled in the task of righteousness! with brotherly emulation we should have sought to purge the guilty sinner, and lead the erring back to godliness!"

"You, my child," replied Mr. Fizgig, "are young, and may do much: I am going fast to the grave, and shall soon throw off this mortal life, and live again in Heaven! Then when I am there I shall behold the wicked tumbled by cart loads into Hell; and those who have reviled me when living and in this world, will then call upon me, and exclaim—"Oh Fizgig! Fizgig! save us! save us! or the Devil will have us!—and then, Sir, I'll intercede for them, and save them from hell fires!"

"Holy man that thou art!" rejoined Mr. Ince. "Do you ever preach? for I would go miles to hear you!"

"The blessing of God be upon you; I preach next Saturday in the brick-fields just behind the Cock and Bladder."

LIPSCOMB'S JOURNEY INTO SOUTH WALES;

Through Oxford, Warwick, Worcester, &c. &c. &c.

EXTRAORDINARY COCKATOO.

THIS recent traveller while visiting Hafod, the celebrated seat of Mr. Johnnes, says—"Here we were introduced to a most beautiful bird of the paroquet species, called the Cockatoo, a native of the East Indies, who ranges about without control; and though he sometimes leaves the garden, and goes into the neighbouring wood, he always returns in the evening to his accustomed place of repose. The gardener informed us, that this extraordinary bird was particularly fond of strangers, who sometimes caressed it.—We no sooner approached than it set up a very shrill note, as if of rejoicing; stretched out its foot from the spray on which he stood, and seemed desirous of a more intimate acquaintance. I gave him my hand, into which he immediately descended with great gravity, but apparent satisfaction; turned himself round, displayed a most beautiful yellow crest, which rises three or four inches from his head, and then perching on my finger, peered up in my face, as if to thank me for this indulgence.

How happy would a disciple of Pythagoras have felt himself in the enjoyment of his favourite doctrine of transmigration: he would have found in the Cockatoo, some valuable and long-lost friend; who, in the new habit of the feathered race, recognized his former acquaintance, and still felt the bond of friendship's sacred tie. There is something inexpressibly beautiful in the idea; and, as it naturally leads to produce a great degree of tenderness and compassion for the animal creation, the man of feeling cannot but lament, that while Christians expunge the errors of this—the Pythagorean—doctrine, they do not more studiously regard the benignity of those principles which it so forcibly inculcates.

"The beautiful little bird travelled with us round the garden, frequently imitating the cry or notes of the different birds, which were singing among the trees. In the hot-house he espied some strawberries, and gathered a great number, but without quitting my hand. Having perambulated the garden, I could not readily disengage myself from my new companion, who clung to me with all the fondness of affection.— At parting, he set up a very shrill note, extremely different from that with which he welcomed our arrival; and we left him to the enjoyment of his fruit, while we went to explore the beauties of the contiguous grounds.”

COLONEL THORNTON AND MR. FLINT.

VERY incorrect and mutilated reports of what passed in the Court of King's Bench, in the case of “Col. Thornton v. William Flint, Esq.” having appeared in the London and Country newspapers, we are authorized to insert the following, as a brief, but faithful, sketch of the trial:—

Mr. Erskine shewed cause against a rule obtained by Mr. Garrow, why a criminal information should not issue against William Flint, Esq. He stated that the affair arose out of a sporting bet, between Col. Thornton and Mr. Flint, on a race to be rode by Mrs. Thornton. He took occasion to deprecate the spectacle of a lady riding a race, and stated from Colonel Thornton's own account, that the bet of 1000 guineas, above the £500 originally staked, was a delusion on the public; that Mr. Flint had supplied the necessities of Colonel Thornton, when in embarrassment, and had not received a grateful return; that Colonel Thornton had given offence to Mr. Flint, by not answering his letters; that after Mr. Flint had posted Col. Thornton, Col. Thornton had made his election to refer the whole matter to the Earl of Darlington, and other stewards, and ought therefore to be content; that in fact Mr. Flint swore, that Col. Thornton had bit him through the arse, and struck the first blow on the Grand Stand, and had first called Mr. Flint a blackguard. That when Mr. Flint asked Colonel Thornton to go out of the Grand Stand, he meant it as innocently as he should, if he asked Mr. Garrow to go out of the Court with him to adjust any matter in dispute. Mr. Erskine indulged in much mirth and humour, and trusted their Lordships would think this a matter fit for a Yorkshire Grand Jury.

Mr. Parke would trouble their Lordships very shortly, by merely stating, that the affidavit of Col. Thornton seemed to imply that the whole ground-work of this affair was the bet of 1000 guineas; but it was far from being so. Mr. Flint charged Colonel Thornton with great want of punctuality in some other pecuniary transactions; that Col. Thornton had acknowledged the bet of 1000 guineas to be a humbug; that Mr. Flint alleges Col. Thornton to have pretended to present him with a brace of pistols; but in the end, Mr. Flint was arrested for them, and obliged to pay for them, with the law expences.

Mr. Raine said, Mr. Erskine and Mr. Parke had discussed the business so ably and satisfactorily, that he should not trouble their Lordships.

Mr. Garrow was not surprised to observe his learned friends advert so briefly to the real cause and nature of this application, and dwell on circumstances so frivolous and immaterial. He could not help remembering what fell from Mr. Erskine, on a former case that morning, where he impressed on his Lordship

Lordship the necessity of separating the individual from the public, and interfering for the peace and security of the latter. He was not inclined to patronize, any more than his learned friend, females riding races; but he could not discern what that had to do in extenuation of the outrage committed by Mr. Flint. His Lordship had not long since declared, that he would not permit a legal place of public amusement to be made a bear-garden of by the unruly tempers of certain irritable gentlemen. That observation implied with irresistible force in this case. Much had been said about Mr. Flint's having used the words imputed to him, when he purchased the horse-whip, but their Lordships would remember, that Mr. Flint himself states in his affidavit, that he had appealed to the Jockey Club, and to a certain company, where he told his own story, and that they cried out "Horsewhip him." That he bought a whip, and that he committed the very gross assault with which we charge him, were evident: surely here was a sufficient evidence of his malice, and also the purpose for which he purchased the whip. To protect places of amusement from disturbance of such characters, he trusted their Lordships would feel the necessity of interposing.

Mr. Frederick Williams said, he was to give his feeble support to Mr. Garrow, in doing which, he should need their Lordships' indulgence; indeed he who followed Mr. Garrow must be content humbly to glean the relicts of information, which so rarely escaped his diligence and ability. They called on their Lordships for a criminal information against Mr. Flint, for a gross and flagrant assault, under circumstances of aggravation, which peculiarly entitled them to their Lordships interposition. He contrasted the plain and perspicuous affidavit of Colonel Thornton, with the inconsistencies which marked that of Mr. Flint's. The original foundation of the resentment of Mr. Flint could easily be traced to Colonel Thornton's refusing to open his—Mr. Flint's—letters; but Mr. Flint had provoked this by the contumelious manner in which he had returned a letter of Col. Thornton's, with the laconic superscription—"No answer." The contents of Mr. Flint's letters were insolent and provoking, and he had brooded over the revenge which he threatened, until the meeting at York races.—Mr. Flint had affected to suspect Colonel Thornton's principles and integrity in one sentence of his affidavit, and the next proclaims him accepting of a party of pleasure, and giving further confidence to the man at whose conduct he pretended to revolt. He states a preposterous story about a brace of pistols, and which had been dwelt on by Mr. Parke. He states it as an instance of conduct in Colonel Thornton, which raised his indignation. And in the next paragraph of his affidavit, we find him sitting down in Colonel Thornton's mansion in the absence of the hospitable owner.—He complains of his treatment there, when in fact he was an intruder for above two months, against the will and positive orders of Col. Thornton, who was in London. In respect to the assault, Mr. Ireland swore in corroboration of Colonel Thornton, that his conduct was temperate and gentlemanlike in the highest degree; and that the outrage committed by Mr. Flint was in no way provoked. Indeed it was somewhat remarkable, that with all Mr. Flint's industry, he could not procure one person of the whole concourse at York races to confirm his statement. In fact Mr. Flint had assaulted, under aggravated circumstances, a person by birth and education a gentleman; by fortune, connections, and, as an old magistrate, of great respectability. This conduct of Mr. Flint's had no extenuation; he was neither inflamed with wine, nor instigated by sudden resentment. Mr. Erskine had, no doubt, treated the subject with great humour and some levity; but their Lordships knew he never resorted to merriment, but when he despaired of any effect from a grave and dispassionate discussion; the learned counsel's brilliant imagination might scatter roses round a serpent, but it was still the serpent that stung an hospitable bosom. On a view of the whole case, he hoped their Lordships would think the public had a claim on their Lordships for the interposition now sought.

Lord Ellenborough.—On the subject of the libellous letter, sent to Colonel Thornton, there could not be a doubt as to the propriety of this Court interfering; but as Col. Thornton appealed to another jurisdiction, whose sentence did not fit his notion of justice, he is not now to resort to us. As to the other part of the case, we do not think fit to extend this extraordinary interposition to the present parties, under the circumstances disclosed. Lord Ellenborough, after commenting very severely on Mr. Flint's conduct, said it must go to a Grand Jury.—Rule discharged.

London, February 11, 1806.

We deem it necessary, in justice to Col. Thornton and the turf in general, to say, that there was no decision made by the Jockey Club, or Stewards of the Course, as had been erroneously impressed on the mind of the Lord Chief Justice; nor could any man of the meanest abilities believe, that any club would have pronounced such a sentence, or any other, from ex parte—Flint's—evidence.

CRIM. CON.

Court of King's Bench, March 8.

GILLESPIE v. LEADER.

AFTER the general nature of the declaration had been opened by Mr. Gurney,

Mr. Garrow, on the part of the plaintiff, said—"The plaintiff is a respectable person engaged in trade, who was formerly a coal-factor, and was also in extensive business as a salesman. He some time ago lived in Wapping, where his business was conducted; but as his emoluments increased in proportion to his integrity and industry, he removed to America-square. In 1788, he married the lady whose misconduct brings us here. She is of a respectable family; and at the time of their conjugal union was only twenty years old, he being at that time of the age of twenty-seven years.—They lived together for a long while in a state of perfect connubial felicity: but at the time when it might have been expected that the ardour of love had ripened into friendship, some impediments were thrown in the way of their reciprocal enjoyment. I shall call a gentleman as a witness, whom I presume to be perfectly acquainted with this interruption, but I shall not at this time think it necessary to enter into the long train of circumstances, which my learned friend, if he please, may extract from that witness. Perhaps the grievance will be found to be, that that the sister of the plaintiff, marrying a young gentleman of fashion and fortune, houses were embellished, and equipages were constructed, which excited the jealousy of the wife of the plaintiff, and some ill-humour was occasioned for four-and-twenty hours; the painful effects of which were however removed without the intervention of a third person. More serious disputes afterwards arose: an elegant villa was the object of her ambition, and a country residence was provided for her. The plaintiff found his frequent absence from town to interfere with his commercial engagements; he therefore, in the sequel, left her to enjoy her rural pleasures, whilst he continued in the active discharge of his various duties, to provide the means of her accommodation.—Posterior to this time, the same disinclination to live together remained; and when he resided in America-square, a house was provided for her at the West-end of the town, where he paid occasional visits to her, and where she was attended by two old servants of the family.—There is a decision in a case, in which I was counsel, by a noble and learned judge: it was that of absolute separation between the parties; and yet it was held, that any violation of the purity of the wife would support an action for serious damages. Your Lordship will recollect the case of Weedon and Timbrell. In the present instance, all the comforts of the conjugal state were not resigned; there was a hope that some happy circumstance, or, perhaps, even some common calamity, might restore them to each other. There was, it is true, a deduction from the connubial enjoyments; she was still, however, the protectress of their offspring, and it would be barbarous to say, that the door to their reconciliation might be closed with impunity by any lawless prodigal.

“The defendant for the first time became acquainted with this lady in the month of May or June of the last year. He was at that time a married man, and was invited to a party where Mrs. Gillespie was present, in the circle of some of her own relations. They dined, I believe, and spent the evening together; and as the company was withdrawing, he proposed to see the lady home, which was neither inconsistent with established custom or strict propriety. After he had attended her to the house, he continued a short time in conversation with her, and then retired. He subsequently communicated the particulars of his interview to the common friends at whose house they had visited; who, from motives of friendship, gently cautioned him on the reserve that was due to that lady, as she had not the good fortune to be under the immediate protection of her husband. “Although,” said they, “you are incapable of intending to injure the peace of your own family, or to violate the person of this unfortunate lady, yet there are situations so extremely delicate, that as much unhappiness may arise from misapprehension, as from the commission of actual crime.”

“Soon after this visit, the wife of the defendant died; and if there be a period in which a man feels most disposed to indulge the moral sensibilities of nature, it is the time of such an afflicting event. We have been told from the highest authority, “It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to the house of feasting,” and this preference is to be given, because, for an interval at least, the unruly and irregular passions of man are brought into subjection, jection, and the finer feelings of the heart are in full exercise. It was at this solemn season that the defendant, disregarding the awful instructions he had received from the hand of death, took the opportunity to seduce and debauch the wife of the plaintiff. I say the manner, the time, and the occasion when this excess was committed, point this man out to you as the subject of your severe animadversion.

"The term allowed for the midsummer holidays had closed, and Mrs. G. attended her son to a school at Woodford, whither the defendant accompanied her: and will it be believed, that from the door of this seminary, where she parted with her own child, that he might be instructed in truth, honour, and virtue, she proceeded to Epping Place, where she slept two nights with the defendant, and committed the crime for which he is now brought before you! He repeated this offence on numerous other occasions, and these parties are at this moment living together in a state of avowed adultery." After some general observations,

Mr. Cassel, a gentleman at the bar, and brother to the lady, was called. He said that his sister was married to Mr. Gillespie on the 30th of April 1788; that they had had seven children, of whom there were five now alive. They continued together in perfect harmony until 1798; and, as far as he saw, Mr. Gillespie conducted himself as an excellent husband. The witness remembered some differences at that time, but nothing conveying any imputation on the honour, or involving any breach of morality, in either party. Afterwards, they attempted to converse with the witness on the propriety of a separation, but he would never listen to any such proposals.

Mrs. Fleming said she met the defendant and Mrs. Gillespie at Mr. John Cassel's in May last. Mr. C. had ordered his man to go home with the lady, but the defendant sent back the servant, and attended her himself. In the course of the same week he informed the witness, in a manner of unusual warmth and interest, that he was going to the play the same evening with Mrs. Gillespie. The witness told him to take care what he was doing; she was a married woman, and although she did not live with her lawful protector, yet she was "clothed with a husband." The defendant thanked her for her good advice, and withdrew.

The servants at the inn at Epping confirmed the fact of the adultery.

Jane Smith deposed that she had been in the service of Mrs. Gillespie eleven years. She said the boys were during the holidays, generally in America-square, and the young ladies with Mrs. Gillespie. The husband sometimes came to drink tea in Park-lane with the wife and daughters. She remembered one of the young gentlemen being taken to school, at Woodford, about a month after the first visit paid by the defendant. No one but the child went with her mistress, and no person returned with her. She left word that she would be absent one night, and she did not appear from the Wednesday to the Friday following. The defendant was afterwards frequent in his visits, and was sometimes at the house when Mr. Gillespie called: in such cases he always went up stairs in order to be concealed. The defendant occasionally slept at Mrs. Gillespie's. The chamber of her mistress was on the first floor, and on the same floor was the apartment of the gentleman; a narrow narrow passage intervening. Before she was acquainted with the defendant, the lady used to rise at nine or ten o'clock; her hours were afterwards altered to eleven or twelve. The defendant repeated his visits until the plaintiff came to the house, and broke up the establishment.—While the plaintiff was there for that purpose the defendant sent up his name, was admitted, an altercation ensued, and he was turned out of doors. One Friday evening before, the defendant was in the house when Mr. Gillespie was there, the former went up stairs as usual, and the witness understood Mr. Gillespie looked through the key-hole, and saw him in the private apartment.

On her cross-examination by Mr. Serjeant Best, she said that she did not herself see him peep; but that the plaintiff told her he looked through the door, and saw the defendant. Her mistress, for some time before, had a residence at Hampstead. Mr. Gillespie often came to the place, and sent for his children to another house. On the occasion of the death of their son, the husband and wife were reconciled, and lived together for a few months. After that, they lived in Wapping, where they were again very unhappy, in a state of continual dispute, but they slept together every night. Subsequently, she returned to Hampstead in 1803, and when he moved to America-square, she lived with him for a short time; but on the same bad terms she had done in Wapping. At intervals, she went to Bristol and Brighton, but always when she was at home they were in the same condition of reciprocal misery. One night, they had gone to bed at the usual hour, and about two o'clock in the morning the witness heard her mistress crying upon the stairs. The lady said she had been forced out of bed; and went into hysterics. After this, she continued in the house for a month; but they always occupied separate beds, and when that time was expired, she went to Park-lane. The witness said, she had often seen her mistress in tears in the morning when she quitted the bed of her husband. Mr. Gillespie never endeavoured to sooth her under her affliction; his conduct was quite the reverse, tending to aggravate her grief.

Re-examination by Mr. Garrow.

—Q. I know it is very difficult to satisfy a lady's maid on the subject of the conjugal duties. Do not tell me of hysterics which may be managed at any time, but tell me of a single act of unkindness of which the plaintiff was guilty? A. My mistress did not explain to me the source of her anxiety.

Q. Then you do not know whether the cause of her sorrow was the want of a gay equipage, or a splendid villa, or what occasioned this sobbing and pouting? A. I cannot tell.

In reply to some questions by the Chief Justice, she said, that the motive of her lady's vexation was never explained to the witness, and that she never knew the plaintiff employ either coarse reproach, or personal violence.

Mr. Thomas was extremely infirm, and attended the Court in a sedan chair, in which he was examined. He deposed like Mrs. Fleming, to the animated eulogium, viz. the defendant delivered in compliment to the beauty and taste of Mrs. Gillespie; and received from the witness the same caution, as the lady was "clothed with a husband." The answer of the defendant to the admonition, was expressed in terms of ridicule on the conduct of Mrs.

Gillespie. The witness was then interrogated, as to the property of the defendant, which being re-stated in the speech of the learned counsel in reply, we shall not notice it here.

Mr. Serjeant Best, for the defendant, said, that, considering the whole of the evidence, he was fully persuaded that the Jury would be of opinion, that it was an act of great indiscretion to disclose those family differences in a court of justice. The case had been opened by his learned friend, as if the design of the verdict were the punishment of the defendant. His Lordship would tell the jury, that to inflict punishment was no part of their duty; the only object which should occupy their minds, was, to assign to the plaintiff a just retribution for any injury he had sustained. By the facts it appeared, that he had suffered no privation of conjugal happiness, because he possessed no portion of that felicity, and therefore the smallest coin would exceed the compensation he deserved. When parties live together in the full exercise of connubial love, and in the fond interchange of natural affection, no sum, however extravagant, that could be assigned, would redress the loss the husband sustained by the conduct of the profligate who violated his bed. But when none of these joys subsisted, and when, as in the present instance, the husband was himself instrumental to his own dishonour, he was neither entitled to private compassion, or to public remuneration. On the evidence of the brother of the lady, it appeared, that ever since the year 1798 they had been living in a state of utter hatred and aversion towards each other. Under what circumstances it was determined to separate, and what were those melancholy disputes which led to such a separation, the jury were not informed; but one thing was certain, that this lady was turned out of the bed of her husband; and if a man drives a young woman of thirty from his embrace, out of his own bed, he ought not to be surprised if he finds her in the bed of a stranger. With this provocation she left the house, and, with the knowledge of her husband, lived in a fashionable part of the town. In that situation, she met with a young man of her own age, accidentally, without any formal seduction: the lady afterwards accompanies him to the play, and seemed willing to join in all his projects. If the fruit fall without plucking, the hand which receives it commits no theft. In the examination of one witness, it was attempted to be shewn, that the defendant was possessed of a large fortune. What was the fact? With his wife the defendant acquired two thousand pounds, and at her death he became possessed of one thousand pounds by an insurance on her life. Then in the whole, with the improvements made in a cottage oracé, he had £3200, and his learned friend, Mr. Garrow, knew as well as any man, how inapplicable such embellishments were to answer the claims of a verdict. Then it was said, he had been selling plate, carriages, and furniture, as if this should be an indication of his wealth, although in every other case, it would be an unquestionable proof of poverty. The defendant had been educated in the navy, where the service of his country had precluded the opportunities of early instruction. On the whole, the learned counsel trusted, that the jury would find the husband deserved no retribution; that the error of the plaintiff was venial, and that the smallest smallest damages ought to be assigned.

Lord Ellenborough, after stating the nature of the action, and the law as applied to it, commented on the various parts of the evidence.—Verdict for the plaintiff, £100.

THE HORSE-DEALERS.

Hertford Spring Assizes, March 10.

DYSON v. TRISBY.

THIS was an action brought by one horse-dealer against another, for slandering his character, in saying he always bought unsound horses, and that he would expose him to the regiments which he served with horses.

Mr. Serjeant Best, for the plaintiff, expatiated on the value of every man's character, particularly in those points connected with his trade; for, to slander a man in his trade was not only to injure his reputation, but went also to deprive him of his living. The plaintiff and defendant, he observed, were both horse-dealers, and the defendant had sold the plaintiff a horse, which proved to be unsound, but he did not for that reason traduce his character. He returned the horse, and said no more. It happened, however, that meeting the plaintiff's son at Barnet fair, he—the son—told him to send for the horse home again: upon this, the defendant poured out a volley of abuse against the plaintiff, called him by several abusive names too gross to repeat; said he always bought lame, blind, and spavined cattle; that he was a rogue and a thief, and cheated every body, which he would prove; and added, that he would go to Woolwich, and expose him to all the regiments which he served; and the consequence of this was, not only the general loss of character, but also the loss of customers, as he should prove to the jury, who would no doubt give ample damages in return.

To prove this case, he called Thomas Milton, who proved the abusive words, and stated, that he left off dealing with the plaintiff for above a month in consequence of it.

The next witness was the plaintiff's son, to whom the words were spoken. He stated that, being at Barnet fair, he told the defendant to fetch away the broken-winded horse which he had sold them; upon which the defendant broke out, and uttered all the abuse stated in the declaration, and swore he would go to Lord Paget, whose regiment they furnished with horses, and expose the plaintiff; and that he would go to Woolwich, and let the Artillery know that he dealt in nothing but unsound horses.

On cross-examination, he said, that he had said nothing to provoke this abuse, though he admitted he had called him rascal and scoundrel, &c. He denied that he had accused the defendant of having cheated his father, by selling him a broken-winded horse. They did not call that cheating in their profession; it was only deceiving. He added, that his father dealt in horses to the amount of £10,000 a-year.

Mr. Serjeant Shepherd, for the defendant, addressed the jury in a very pleasant speech. He read the declaration, in which the plaintiff set out, that by the slander, he had been injured in the opinion of our Sovereign Lord the King, and of divers officers of cavalry of our Sovereign Lord the King, who used to buy horses of him; and ridiculed the fiction to which the defendant had resorted to give importance to his cause. If, he said, all the squabbles among horse-dealers at Barnet fair were to produce actions, and be tried at Hertford, instead of a beggarly list of poor causes they would have a sheet full, and it would be a most glorious harvest for the lawyers. Words of heat and anger, like the present, were never considered as matter for serious damages, for they did no serious injury to the character of any man, and he had the authority of a late learned Chief Justice for this assertion.

He recollected a cause in which the defendant accused the plaintiff of having committed perjury in a former cause. This was certainly a most serious accusation, and the witness clearly proved the words.—It occurred to the acuteness of Lord Kenyon, to ask what else the defendant said; to which the witness replied, "Why, my Lord, he added, that you were a rascal, and all the jury d—d fools." Upon which the learned judge told the jury, that the defendant, by adding him and the jury who tried the former cause, evidently spoke in such blind passion, that he was not likely to be seriously believed, consequently could not injure the character of the plaintiff to any alarming extent. So this was the case here; the defendant had dealt in much unmeaning abuse, and it was not likely it had injured the plaintiff. As for the special damage alleged, that Mr. Milton did not deal with him, it was too farcical to be for a moment believed.

Mr. Justice Heath told the jury that the words were unquestionably actionable, but that the special damage alleged was ridiculous. It was like the case of an assault, where an apothecary was called in to cure a wound, which any old woman in the parish could manage as well. It was like bolstering up a falling wall, and deserved no credit. They would consider whether they would give one shilling or forty, the latter of which would carry costs.—Verdict for the plaintiff—Damages one shilling.

THE WIDOW'S LAST LAMB.

An Engraving.

For these nocturnal thieves, huntman, prepare
Thy sharpest vengeance. Oh! how glorious 'tis
To right th' oppress'd, and bring the felon vile
To just disgrace! SOMERVILLE.

A WE have died in yeanning two fine lambs, the lord of the manor gave them to a poor widow at Orpington, that she might act the part of a foster-mother by them, till they acquired maturity.—The good old woman performed the welcome task to admiration!—had they been the true children of her own bosom, she could not have been more gentle towards them.—In a few months time they followed her, bleating for the nipple, wherever she went, for they knew no other mother; nor was she sparing of the milk-bottle, which always hung by her side. If she went to the market, or crossed the green, her pets were with her; they ran skipping before her to the meadows, and returned as full of frolic to the cottage; and they at length, by their playful innocence, so gained on the affections of their bountiful friend, that she could not bear to have them from her sight. As they acquired strength, and increased in size, they would sometimes however escape her vigilance.—At the back of her humble dwelling was an ample orchard belonging to the squire, where his flock would sometimes sometimes repose under the shadow of the broad trees; through the hedge that separated her garden from these grounds, the little wanton ones would often force their way, to crop the sweet herbage, or frolic with the other lambs. One evening when the shepherd had left the flock, it happened that a prowling fox found means to destroy one of these wanderers, while the other only returned bleating to its protector. The disaster was quickly discovered, and the poor dame refused to be comforted, although all those to whom she told her tale pitied her, and lamented her loss.—She at length determined to be more watchful of her last lamb; but what caution can guard against the cunning of so formidable an enemy?—Tempted by the delicious repast he had made, the cruel savage returned again, and sheltered himself near the gap in the garden hedge, in expectation of the other wanderer.

It was about sun-set, when the good woman was calling her last pet to its repose; it heard her voice, and came skipping across the orchard, when the monster flew from his cover and struck it dead. This act of cruelty entirely overcame the widow! what could she do? she beheld the death of her last lamb!!—In her sad extremity she recollected the fowling piece over her chimney; it was her late husband's, and had never been disturbed since his death, which happened but a few months before: she forgot her age and infirmities; resentment gave wings to her decrepitude, and she flew to her cottage, drew the gun from its case, and as quickly returned to the spot; where, while the tyrant was tearing up her last lamb, the widow shot him through the heart.

Overpowered by her exertions, the poor creature fell to the ground;

the noise of the piece brought her neighbours to her relief; and the squire, for the deed she had done, gave her a pension for life.

How admirably does the ingenious Mr. Somerville thus describe the cunning and cruelty of the fox.

But yet, alas! the wily fox remain'd,
A subtle pilfering foe, prowling around
In midnight shades, and wakeful to destroy.

In the full fold, the poor defenceless lamb,

Seiz'd by his guileful arts, with sweet warm blood

Supplies a rich repast. The mournful ewe,

Her dearest treasure lost, through the dim night

Wanders perplex'd, and, darkling, bleats in vain.

A HINT TO HUSBANDS.

Trevor	Mr. Brunton.
Pliant	Mr. Farley.

THE FABLE.

THE story of this drama is soon detailed:—Lord Transit, a young nobleman, becomes captivated with the natural charms of a girl in a humble station, and marries her; but soon growing weary of retirement, ment, he launches into the mazes of dissipation, and sends Lady Transit back to her family. At the time of their marriage, Fairford, the father of this lady, was in Russia on a commercial speculation, and his family were left rather in distressed circumstances; but, on the return of Lady Transit to her father's residence, she finds him just arrived, and possessed of a considerable property in consequence of the death of the principal partner in the continental firm. He becomes reconciled to his daughter, who had married without his permission, and places a considerable sum of money in her hands to maintain her dignity, but which she privately transmits to her husband, to relieve him from the embarrassments into which his dissipated conduct had involved him. In the mean time, Lord Transit, struck by remorse, and considering himself degraded by the levity of his town companions, eagerly wishes for a reconciliation with his wife, particularly on being deceived by Trevor, a young officer, the nephew of Fairford, with regard to his suspicions of an intrigue between his lady and Sir Charles Le Brun: the parties are brought together at the house of Lady Le Brun; and Fairford, who had discovered by some papers the benevolence of Lord Transit to his wife during his absence abroad, relieves his Lordship from great embarrassment by relinquishing a considerable claim he held upon his estates, and consents to his daughter's reconciliation with her husband.

The main story is diversified by the mutual endeavours of Lord Transit and Sir Charles Le Brun to seduce each other's wife, but they are both disappointed by the virtue of the respective ladies.

The author of this piece has been less solicitous to frame a plot than to communicate moral sentiments, and to correct the vices and follies of fashion. His fable is, indeed, very little calculated to excite interest or surprize. There is nothing novel or very striking in his characters.—We have not, however, much room for remarks on the merits or defects of the piece; and as it was very well received throughout by a numerous audience, there is the less necessity for observation. We could not discover any thing to justify the title, as the play affords no particular hint to husbands that is at all likely to improve the marriage state. Lord Transit parts with his wife without any reasonable plea, though it is afterwards found out that he has a penchant for Lady Le Brun, which, however, is soon at an end, and he is disposed to receive his wife again. George Trevor appears to have an attachment to Lady Transit, which is improperly introduced, because an amiable character is, of course, unhappy, and sympathy is unavailing. Fairford is a sort of Job Thornberry.

The sentiments are in general just, and are very neatly, and sometimes elegantly, expressed. The general tendency of the piece is to exercise the feelings, and to confirm the moral principles.

The acting throughout was entitled to applause, particularly that of C. Kemble, Pope, Fawcett, Brunton, Miss Smith, and Mrs. Glover. Blanchard exerted himself with great zeal in O'Dogherty, but was very deficient in the Hibernian dialect.

The prologue was very creditable to the poetical talents of Sir J. B. Burgess, and the epilogue to the author of the play. They were well delivered by Brunton and Miss Smith.

HARRY

HARRY LEE, IN ANSWER TO DANIEL MENDOZA.

See page 222 of our last Magazine.

MR. EDITOR,

I HAVE to thank you for the candid and manly manner in which you announced your intention to afford me an opportunity of confuting the charges brought against me by Daniel Mendoza.

Among the extraordinary events that fate or folly produce, I believe insanity itself never dreamt of an epistolatory correspondence between D. Mendoza and Harry Lee. What devil could have provoked him to exhibit his wonderful stock of honour, virtue, and benevolence in so public a manner, I am at a loss to divine; but clear and certain I am, that all the advantage he promised himself he has already enjoyed. It is the curse of fools to be the heralds of their own disgrace; for mark, Mr. Editor, how a plain undisguised story, delivered by a plain unlettered matter-of-fact-man, shall be set down.

Mr. Mendoza has thought proper to pester the Public with a long narrative of his extravagant acts of kindness towards me—that he rescued me from the hands of a bailiff, the confines of a prison, and other disastrous perils. However, not to retail all the haberdashery of complaints he has thought proper to extend to an unreasonable length, I shall content myself with briefly answering the essence of his charge against me, and I trust I shall have credit for doing it with truth and candour, without the aid of Mr. Mendoza's ingenuity.

It is true, I was arrested on two writs of £10 each, a circumstance that has frequently happened to honest men than either Mendoza or

Harry Lee. It is also true, that I called on him to assist in procuring me my enlargement, which, by the bye, was but a slender tribute to the gratitude he owed me; he certainly procured me bail upon my promise of settling both actions. As Mr. Mendoza admits, I did pay one. I am very sorry, for his own sake, he did not keep a little nearer truth with respect to the state of the other, as that might have relieved him from the reprobation that injustice, fallacy, and ingratitude merits.

The second action, upon which I am accused of having run from my bail, and left Mr. Mendoza under all the piteous, lamentable, and ruinous circumstances to pay, stood exactly thus at the time of his letter:—The debt and costs came to £16—the alternative was payment or going to prison—£14 I raised and paid, so that all Mendoza could possibly be liable to, was the vast sum of £2, which I have also paid.—And here, Mr. Editor, you must give me leave to declare, that I think no man living abhors the idea of deserting his bail, or deceiving his friend more than I do. How far I have done either in the present case, I leave to the determination of any man, D. Mendoza excepted. Admit for a moment, Mr. Editor, that I had left Mr. Mendoza to pay a few pounds for me, for what he terms fixing my security, the offence, surely, could not be held in any very heinous light by him, if he will have the goodness to call to his recollection the situation in which he left all his friends who were security for his integrity when he commenced sheriff's officer.

And now, Mr. Editor, I crave your attention to a few words more, which I trust will quench the thirst of Mr. Mendoza for literary fame, and exhibit him as a paragon of gratitude.

gratitude. I make great allowance for the passions of a man labouring to prove himself more conscientiously honest than myself; but I cannot help lamenting that he chose the subject of ingratitude for his purpose; and the demon who whispered it in his ear was certainly unacquainted with the account current between him and myself, upon the article of gratitude, which in fairness ought to have been stated.—In fine, Sir, Mr. Mendoza has, upon some very urgent occasions, been driven to the solitary friendship of Harry Lee, who afforded it him, in the most ample manner his capacity would permit. However, fortunately for Mendoza, it was sufficient for all his purposes. Upon two several occasions have I solicited the pecuniary assistance of my friends, in aid of what my own abilities could afford, and this too for the purpose of extricating him from the most irksome of all personal inconvenience, as well as to succour his almost famished family. Believe me, Mr. Editor, it is painful to me to upbraid a man with the services I have done him, nor should any consideration whatever have induced me to reveal them, had he not goaded and scourged me into the measure. Perhaps Mendoza has forgot the letters in my possession, expressive of the great obligation I had conferred on him, and which, I trust, would put both him, and the devil who instructed him to turn author, to the blush upon a perusal, whenever he finds it convenient to give me an opportunity to publish them.

With respect to the language that may have passed between us, I admit it may not have been the most chaste; but, considering all things, not very illy adapted to our professions or habits of life. It is sufficient to say that the Public have learnt from Mendoza's statement, that it has brought about a challenge, which has been accepted, to determine the dispute by manual argument, and I will not envy the laurels he may gather on the occasion. I can only promise, that I will do my utmost to prevent his tearing a single sprig from the brows of your most obedient humble servant,

W. LEE.

BOXING.

D. MENDOZA AND H. LEE.

FRIDAY, March 21, 1806, being appointed for the above pugilists to exhibit themselves in a pitched battle, for 50 guineas, the same took place at Grimstead-green, three miles and a half through the town of Bromley, in Kent. The combatants met in a 25 feet roped ring, formed on the green, soon after one o'clock, attended by their seconds, Bill Ward and Bill Gibbons for Mendoza, and the Game Chicken and Gulley for Lee. Dan Mendoza is known to the Public as a first-rate bruiser of the old school, and a man who knew more of the real science of boxing than any other man of his day. If he was not of stature and size to engage with the champions of that day, Johnson and Ben, his name was regarded with terror amongst fighting men. His last battle, which was with Jackson, was fought nine years ago, and he at that time relinquished all pretensions to fight again. He, however, was induced to enter the lists with Lee, in consequence of a dispute respecting matters foreign to us.—Harry Lee, as well as his opponent, has has been a pugilist 20 years, and never until the present day did he become a candidate for fighting fame. He never fought a pitched battle, although he was a good sparrer and a judge of the sport; but he has acted as a trainer, &c. to the rising generation of bruisers.

The contest, before setting-to, and ever since the match has been made, has been looked upon merely as a spirit of resentment, and such as would be a very easy conquest to Mendoza, a proof of which was, that current betting in the ring was 3 to 1 on Mendoza. Dan Mendoza entered the ring nearly half an hour before his opponent, and walked round it with great composure until Lee stripped, when he eagerly did the same, with a smile of confidence as to the result.

THE BATTLE.

2d. Lee went in to his man very angrily. Mendoza hit him, and the blow was returned on the nose; they closed, and fell irregularly. Lee's nose bled very much from the blow he had received on the eye, in the first round.

3d. Lee went in again furiously; Mendoza hit him with his right hand and left, and he fell.

4th. Lee still very game, gave Mendoza a hard blow on the left eye. Mendoza threw him.—2 to 1 that Mendoza did not win in half an hour.

5th. Mendoza hit his man as he attempted to rally, and knocked him under the ropes.—3 to 1 on Mendoza.

6th. Mendoza waited for Lee to rally, and on his daring so, he gave him a tremendous blow over the nose, and threw him.

7th. The combatants closed at meeting, and fell irregularly.

8th. Lee rushed twice at his man in this round, and each time Mendoza hit him a hard blow; he pursued Lee to the ropes and gave him a complete cross buttock. The head of Lee was at this time dreadfully disfigured.

9th. Mendoza gave his man a tremendous blow on the swelled eye as he rallied.—5 to 1 on Mendoza.

10th. Mendoza laughed his opponent out of countenance; Lee made a feeble hit with his left hand, and dropped on his knees.

11th. Lee rushed angrily at his man; Mendoza hit him in a rally, and Lee run away from him, and laid himself easily on the ground.

12th. In this round Mendoza began to make play, he rallied and knocked his opponent out of the ring.

13th. Lee, notwithstanding his ill success, rallied his man; Mendoza hit him, when he clung to his man to save a heavy fall.

14th. Lee, after receiving a blow, run away and laid himself down again. Loud hisses from the populace—cries of take him away; foul, foul.

15th. Lee fell without a blow. Mendoza laughed at him.—6 to 1 on Dan.

16th. Mendoza jopped him with his left hand in the throat; Lee fell extremely weak.—A guinea to half-a-crown on Mendoza.

17th. Lee, after receiving a hit, fell, not choosing to wait for a second.

T4

18th.

18th. Both closed, and fell in disorder.

19th. Lee rallied with spirit. Mendoza hit him on the chin and cut him dreadfully; after which he knocked him under the ropes.

20th. Lee rushed angrily. Mendoza laughed, and stopped his blows; they closed and fell irregularly.

21st. Mendoza hit his man a terrible body blow, and he fell in it.—Any odds that were asked.

22d. Lee fell without a blow, whilst his opponent aimed one at him. Loud cries of foul, and a general murmur.

23d. Both fell, having closed without blows.

24th. Lee rallied, Mendoza stopped his hits with his left hand and beat him away with his right. Lee slipped up; Dan smiled.

25th. Mendoza hit his opponent two blows, while attempting to rally, and he fell through weakness.

26th. Mendoza as fresh as when he began, hit down his man without ceremony.

27th. Lee fell weak, after attempting a hit.

28th. Lee went into his man, seized him by the arm, and hauled him down. Any odds, as usual.

29th. Several blows were exchanged in a rally made by Lee. Mendoza had the worst of the round, although his opponent fell undermost.

30th. Mendoza stopped every blow that was attempted by his opponent. In the latter part of the round Mendoza slipped, and Lee took advantage of it, by repeating several good blows on his opponent's face.

31st. An irregular round; both closed and fell.

32d. Mendoza appeared weak; he made a hit and fell on his knees.

33d. Lee affected to be very gay, although the left side of his face was most miserably disfigured; his attempts, however, although very good, were counteracted by weakness and stupidity with fighting.

34th. A hard round, in favour of Mendoza.

35th. Dan beat his man under the ropes.

36th. Precisely the same as the last.

37th, 38th, and 39th. Mendoza had the advantage by stopping and hitting.

40th. Dan hit his man two hard blows in the ribs, and he fell in the last of them.

41st. Lee fell down with a slight blow, as if he could stand no more.

42d. Lee, for the last time with any effect, summoned all his efforts, and fought a hard round; but Mendoza dropped him in the end very cleanly.

The battle was continued until the 52d round, very much to the disadvantage of Lee, who, however, shewed himself game, by the very severe beating he had received. In the 53d round, which ended the fight, Lee fell without a blow; and Mendoza's seconds did not choose to give away a chance, as they had done several times in the course of the battle; and the matter being referred to two Gentlemen who acted as umpires, they declared Mendoza the winner, after a sharp contest of one hour and ten minutes.

OBSERVATIONS.—In this contest, which it was supposed would be the most hollow thing ever attempted, the spectators were very agreeably surprised. Lee, although he did not act the part of a game man in the strict sense of the word, in falling without a blow, yet he was not deficient in skill and resolution so as to disenable him to rouse the admiration admiration of the amateurs. He never had a chance of winning, although he made a very good fight; for the odds, to nearly the end of the contest, were treble against him to what they were at the commencement; and at the end, when Mendoza became weak, they were never less than four to one. He got himself miserably beaten in the former part of the fight by making play, but his seconds did not suffer him so to act at the latter part. He had the advantage in stature and length of arm, and he fought with his left hand extended, constantly sawing. Mendoza had a decided advantage over his opponent, in the knowledge of bruising, which the beating Lee received will most fully demonstrate. Dan stopped most admirably, and he seldom hit with his right hand without the desired effect. With his left he sometimes led himself into an error, for he generally hit over his man, and left his right side exposed. He shewed himself a pleasing fighter, as he always has done; and his fatigue at the end of the fight was no more than momentary, for he was quite fresh after the contest was over, and his only suffering was from a blow he had on the left eye, and another on the nose, which was broken in a fight many years since.

It is almost incredible the number of spectators that were present; every one who had any taste for pugilism was there; for if they could not anticipate a gratifying sight, the desire to see a first-rate bruiser of the old school exhibit himself, and especially such a man as Mendoza, was no ordinary novelty. The circle on the outside of an immense ring was not sufficient for the Gentlemen Amateurs closely packed, and some hundreds were not able to approach the ring or see the exhibition.

— ANOTHER account says, the pugilistic contest between Mendoza and Harry Lee was much more serious to the former than has been generally described. About the 30th round the odds changed from 5 to even betting; and tho' Lee declared himself compelled at last to give in, on which his seconds advised him to drop without receiving a blow, which decided the battle, Mendoza was so severely beaten, that he was immediately put to bed with both eyes closed, and his face mangled in a shocking manner. All the bruisers and amateurs were collected on this occasion; the latter, however, without any distinction of birth or rank, were obliged to conform to the following disposition, under the authority of the lower orders, who were in powerful array in the rear of the ring: the front rank, of nobles as well as simples, were compelled to sit, and the second to kneel down on the grass, which, considering the wet state of the soil, was found, before the expiration of the hour and quarter's fight, to be rather hard suit and service to the high and mighty commanders in chief of the metropolitan mob! The following were the leading amateurs present at this contest; viz. Lord Albemarle, Lord Sefton, Count Beaujoloise, Sir Watkin W. Wynne, Sir John Shelley, Sir Edm. Nagle, Captain Halliday, Mr. Thornhill, General Keppel, Mr. Buxton, Mr. Fletcher Reid, Mr. Bayley, Mr. Robert Allen, Mr. Chalic.

A THIRD account states, that Mendoza, in his late battle with Lee, in protecting himself from a blow directed against his right side, received it on his left hand in the first round, and was not able to use it, except open, during the remainder of the fight. This was not known till the conflict was decided.

Two other battles took place.—The combatants in the first engagement were O'Donnel the dustman, and a novice, whose name is not worth recording, as the drubbing O'Donnel gave him will probably prevent him from ever becoming a competitor for pugilistic honours again. The last engagement was the most obstinate of all, and afforded more sport to the amateurs than either of the former. The names of these heroes were Toney and Smith. Toney had just returned from his travels, having made fourteen years tour through the continent of Botany Bay, and so far he may be considered an accomplished bruiser at least. The combatants displayed no science, but maintained the battle with unparalleled obstinacy. The bets were equal until the two last rounds, when Smith exhibited some symptoms of weakness. Bets were then five to one in favour of Toney, who at last gave his antagonist a blow, which terminated in Smith's giving in, much to the dissatisfaction of the populace, whose favourite he was.

STRICTURES UPON LEGACY HUNTERS.

MR. EDITOR,

IN pursuance of this plan, I hope I shall be excused for presuming to offer an apology for Legacy-hunters, who have been less kindly treated than hunters who follow other sorts of game, although they encounter equal fatigues, while their object is somewhat more important; for I presume no man will be foolish enough to deny, that the Bank affords better sport than the most extensive manor in the kingdom; and that a covey of three per cents. is better worth finding than one of partridges.

I might begin by appealing to antiquity; since, in the opinion of some, antiquity stamps a certain degree of merit and celebrity on all human things; and as some practices afford pleasure because they are new, there are others we think justifiable, because they are old. The ancient poets take frequent notice of legacy-hunters by the appellation of cupitores and heredipetæ. The Romans then, it is plain, had a race of legacy-hunters; and, if we were able to trace manners as easily as we can conquests and dynasties, we might probably find that some of them arrived in this country with its earliest conquerors, or came more circuitously through the ancient nations of the continent, and landed with William. Be this as it may, their origin is ancient; and, I apprehend, their principles are yet more ancient, although they might not, until later times, be applied exactly in the way we now find them. At first, they might be employed to intercept a convoy, or burn a town, and, in time, by various refinements and modifications, become useful only in the more gentle employment of nursing imbecility and practising on idiotism.

It is of importance to contemplate the practices of legacy-hunters, which seem so very amiable as to require less vindication than, perhaps, I may be induced to offer. If we consider how little real friendship there is in the world, and how little real sympathy with pain and disease, we must surely be induced to admire a race who are all friendship and all sympathy; who visit when others desert, and are never so attentive as when the prospects of health and pleasure and life are about about to close. Such, indeed, is their assiduity on these occasions, that no obstacle prevents them; and, although they are far from being deficient in attendance at other times, they are most particularly so when their friends are most helpless, and in greatest want of assistance.

But, in addition to their sympathy, we must notice their humility. There are no offices so servile as to be beneath their performance, and no inconveniences which they are not ready to submit to. On such occasions, their assiduity to their inferiors, their desire to please, and their eagerness to obtain a favourable report, banish all notions of pride and superiority. And as such virtues must often be practised for a considerable length of time, and amidst many mortifications, and many privations, surely some degree of respect is due to those who can act their part so well, and that, perhaps, a part they have not been accustomed to act, which they have been obliged, in the stage phrase, to perform at a short notice.

Submission is another virtue highly requisite in legacy-hunters. Their art, indeed, is admirably calculated to root out all the remainders of conceits, and that adherence to favourite opinions which has crumbled our world into fashions and sects. The moment they begin the hunt, they renounce all opinion of their own, yield to that of their "dear friend" with implicit deference, and give up to him, for a certain time, the use, not only of their understanding, but of their eyes and ears. They renounce, above all things, that author of all disputes, that bane of all social conversation, the spirit of contradiction; and although, amidst this general surrender, they seem to retain very little of the rational creature, yet they do not entertain a worse opinion of themselves, and are generally more highly esteemed by their friends, if ultimately successful. Their eyes are still useful for watching, and their ears for listening, a faculty, which, by the way, is so necessary in legacy-hunting, that very few have ever attained much proficiency without it. To be a good listener is, indeed, a talent of so productive a kind, that very considerable estates have been procured by it. It is particularly necessary in attending on the aged, who are very apt to tell long stories, or in the case of persons whose memories are not very good, and who are apt to tell the same stories whenever they tell any thing at all. In listening too, it is absolutely necessary to be exceeding dull and stupid, laughing or applauding only when the signal is given by the speaker. All emotions of ridicule, and attempts at wit are to be avoided as poverty itself; for I have known many very eminent legacy-hunters, who have missed the game within a few hours, merely by starting aside, or stumbling upon a poor joke or pun.

To these virtues, it is almost needless to say, that the exercise of patience is indispensably necessary. This, indeed, is the foundation of the whole; and of what does patience consist, but of the suppression of all caprice, ill-temper, hasty and harsh words, and little resentments. For this reason, if I might be permitted to give advice to legacy-hunters, while I attempt to vindicate them, I would suggest, that it is an amusement which, if not begun in youth, can rarely be practised with success in age. I know several legacy-hunters, who have begun late in life, and have always ways been unsuccessful from want of patience, and from forgetting they are to comply with the humours of another at the expence of their own. Youth, when the faculties are supple, is the proper time to begin the art: and hence it is, that parents of much experience begin very early to train up their children to that kind of respect for bachelor-uncles and maiden-aunts, which may ultimately conduct them with advantage to the Probate-office. I cannot, however, recommend a very early attempt at this art, as young people are apt to be impatient and careless; yet, with proper instructions on the doctrine of the main-chance, it is wonderful what proficiency some will attain at an age when others are contentedly drudging in shops and warehouses, acquiring no more wealth than they can earn.

If my readers will now seriously consider, that there are a race of human beings who make it their study, some for months, and some for years, to practise the amiable qualities above-mentioned. I trust they will agree with me, that legacy-hunters may be presented in a more favourable light than that in which they have hitherto been placed. Your's, &c.

PETER POST-OBIT.

JOHN BULL AND NAP FROG.

MR. EDITOR,

I HAVE often read in the public papers, letters signed Cato, Brutus, Socrates, &c. which I suppose are the names of fine gentlemen at the west end of the town, which talk a great deal about British principles, and French principles, and constitutions, and balances of power, and such other high-flown matters. Some of these things they always pitch upon to be the causes of the wars between England and France. I like these gentlemen very well for the fine words they make use of, but the d—— I a Cato, or Socrates of them all, knows any thing about the matter. Now, if you'll give me a little room, I'll let you into the secret.

You must know then, that all this fighting is not about principles or any such thing, but about one shop selling more than another, and Mr. Bull getting on in trade so much faster than Mr. Frog. I don't wish to say any harm of Mr. Bull, but certain it is he was not always such a great man as he is now. When first he begin'd the world he was but a poor wool-stapler, and used to sell all his wools raw to one Mynheer Brabant and other folks. After a little while, he got to be a clothier, and sold his wools made up; would not sell none no other ways. This soon makes him rich, and then he sets up cutler besides, with a great many work-shops at Sheffield first, and then at Wolverhampton and Birmingham. Well—money makes money, as the saying is, and it was always Mr. Bull's way, whenever he got a pound, to lay it out in getting another. So now he buys a very large estate, called the West Indies. In course, you know, all his tenants there deal for every thing they want only at his shop, and he buys all they have to sell, such as cotton, indigo, rum, sugar, and so on. These here things he brings home to his own shop, and a fine figure you may be sure they cut there. Indeed, ever after this time he has called it a warehouse, and is affronted if any body calls it any thing else. All sorts of people come from far and near to deal deal there for every thing. The next thing he does he buys another great estate called the East Indies, and serves his tenants there the same way, gets them to buy every thing of him, and sell every thing to him. So now he gets tea and silk, and twenty things more into his warehouse. Well, after this, he sets up his sister Hibernia in another large shop, and teaches her to make linens. Through these ways he came to be what he is; and now he is so rich, that wherever he chooses to employ his capital, he beats almost every other tradesmen out of the market.

All this while, Mr. Frog, though he began the world much better than Mr. Bull, has hardly been able to get into any other trade than the wine and brandy line, which he began with. Being moreover a devilish flashy, extravagant chap, whenever he gets any thing, he spends it right out, either in junketting, or swaggering about and quarrelling, which makes bad worse; so he seldom can make both ends meet, and he's been a bankrupt time after time. Having got no credit, he's obliged to pay money down for every thing he buys. Here again Mr. Bull beats him, for as his notes are as good as cash, he can buy every thing wholesale, all the world over, and make Mr. Frog himself come to his warehouse. Thus altogether, what with poverty and what with envy, Mr. Frog, you may be sure, cannot be quiet; and, as Mr. Bull will not give up business, they two can never agree. Mr. Frog wants some of Mr. Bull's estates in the East and West, but Mr. Bull says he'll be d——d if he shall have a bit.

Then there is another thing; Mr. Bull has got the best set of servants in all the world, called Jack Tars. O! my eyes, it is a pleasure to see these: such jolly, strong, brave, clever fellows; does their work in such a style, and all in good humour too, it's a treat even to hear of them. Now Mr. Frog he wants to have some Tars too. So he puts jackets and trowsers on his people, and bids them go and swagger about and quarrel with the Jacks. O! if you was but to see how Mr. Bull's people serves them! Such upsetting, smashing, and lathering! Away run Mr. Frog's people back again, and then Mr. Frog spits at Mr. Bull, and calls him tyrant! So you see, as I said before, these two can never agree; and, if this is not a truer account of the matter than ever Cato, or Socrates wrote, say I'm a fool, and not a deep dog of.

FEAST OF WIT; OR, SPORTSMAN'S HALL.

AN Irish labourer, who had lived some time in London, being asked on his return to his native country if the English were not a very cleanly nation?—So cleanly, said he, that they wash their very milk with water.

MORE LATIN.—Mr. N. an attorney at Norwich, once presented a literary fragment to Miss R. an actress on the Norwich stage, and a friend of his, for her perusal. The fragment ended with catera desunt. After reading it through, she asked, "What

"What does catera desunt mean, Mr.N?" "Why, Madam," replies he, "it means that the rest is not decent."

FRENCHMAN AND BUTCHER.

A HALF-STARV'D Frenchman once,
'tis said,

Pass'd near a Butcher's door;
Where British beef—good white and red,
Hung round in plenteous store.

The Frenchman gaz'd with longing eyes,
Then loud, "bon, bon," he cried;
The Butcher turn'd with quick surprise,
Then spoke with wounded pride—

"Get out you great outlandish cheat,
Nor talk such stuff as that;
You say "bone, bone!"—I say ''tis meat,
And meat extremely fat."

A SWINDLER, of the name of White or Wright, has lately turned banker, and issued what he calls Ditton bank-notes.—This village, it is true, has a bank, but does no other business than, in conjunction with its neighbour on the opposite shore, direct the running account of Old Father Thames.

An incident lately occurred in the House of Commons, which created much pleasantry. The Speaker, in putting the question for committing Alexander Trotter to the custody of the Serjeant at Arms, substituted the name of Alexander Davison. This qui pro quo, for putting in durance the Treasurer of the Ordnance in place of the Ex-Paymaster of the Navy, convulsed the House with laughter.

AN English writer, in a recent tract on Ireland, actually gives it as his serious opinion, that more Englishmen are born in Waterford than in any other part of the kingdom.

IRISH review.—Some differences lately occurred between a corps of volunteers and their commandant. The regiment was ordered to appear before the inspecting general, and the colonel, of course, gave the word of command, "Attention—Shoulder arms." Not a muscle nor a musket moved. The command was repeated in a louder voice—the corps was still motionless. The general much surprised, beckoned to a serjeant, and asked why the corps refused to act?—"An't plaise your honour," says Pat, making the due obeisance, "it is bekays the colonel and the regiment are not on spalking terms!"

THERE have been many jokes about the refusal of an Irish gentleman to marry a lady whose name is Fortune. If, however, we are to trust to satirists, many a man who marries is wedded to Mis-fortune.

THERE are three families of the following names in the town of Croydon, Surry:—Wildgoose, Sage, and Onion.

PARADOX.—At a country fair and horse-race in Scotland, a few days ago, two adjoining booth-keepers sold "the best London porter;" one at sixpence, and the other at fourpence the quart. The latter, as might be expected, was first sold off; but it may appear somewhat extraordinary, that he who sold at the lowest price made the most money, though he had the article from his opponent. The fact was, the sixpenny man having had a present made of a barrel, from London, and considering the fair as affording a good opportunity of converting the liquor into cash, though no publican he opened a booth for the purpose. His neighbour, considering this as an intrusion, and perceiving the situation of the barrel, while it was tapped at one end by its first possessor, he made an incision in the canvas that separated the two tents, and took the liberty of tapping it at the other end! Proclamation being made of the prices, the thirsty fair folks flocked to the fourpenny porter booth, till the cask, which had a little downward inclination at the other end, would run no more!! The people were then under the necessity of resorting to the other booth, but that tap was soon exhausted; the reduced price end having drained the whole barrel, except four or five quarts.

AN Irish gentleman giving a description of the late Lord G....r's house, said, after enumerating several particulars, "Then we proceeded into the hunting room, which is adorned with stags' horns, and other family pictures.

A CHALLENGE is said to have been sent by an unsuccessful candidate for a central county, against the more fortunate one, who had been elected. The answer of the latter was, "That he did not feel disposed to let any opponent create a vacancy of his seat, in order to fill it himself.

NEWARK COCKING.—On Wednesday the 19th, Thursday the 20th, and Friday the 21st ult. the Long Main of Cocks fought between the Gentlemen of Yorkshire, (Thompson feeder) and the Gentlemen of Nottinghamshire, (Gilliver feeder) for 5gs a battle, and 100gs the main, was won by the latter, by five a-head.

LINCOLN COCKING.—The Main of Cocks lately fought here during three days, between the Gentlemen of North Lincolnshire, and the Gentlemen of South Lincolnshire, consisted of 24 battles, and each side won 12.

A BLIND man has been pitted against the mail coach from Halifax to Bradford, where the road is principally over hills; and it will appear a little extraordinary, that he beat the mail into the latter town by 13 minutes.

THE Game Chicken has received a challenge to fight, from a gamekeeper of the name of Ford, in the West of England. The challenger invites invites the champion to fight either for a sum of money, or what is elegantly termed a bellyfull.—The match is to be made without delay.

Two men, named Darkin and Lemming, on Friday the 21st inst. fought a pitched battle in Shoulder-of-mutton-fields, Hackney, for the possession of a favourite lass, when after an hour's exercise, the former being desperately beaten, relinquished his claim.

A FEW weeks since, a poney, the property of Mr. J. Moore, of Mil-denhall, for a trifling wager, galloped from the above place to Burry and back again, a distance of 25 miles, in one hour and 29 minutes. He was allowed two hours, but performed it in 31 minutes within the time. The weight of the poney is only 25 stone, its height under 13 hands, and the rider weighed 11 stone.

As a gentleman was lately trol-ling for jack, in Stratford river, near Salisbury, a sea-gull suddenly darted at his bait, a gudgeon, which it seized, let go, and seized again.—The gull was ultimately hooked nigh its beak, and taken unhurt. It is a very fine bird, of beautiful plumage, and is sent to the pond of a neighbouring seat.

LINCOLN ASSIZES.—Abel, a London horse-dealer, v. Fox, a farmer.—This was an action to recover £60, the price of a horse sold at Horncastle fair. The horse becoming lame before the plaintiff got him home, he returned him; but failing to prove him unsound at the time of the purchase, the jury gave a verdict for the defendant. It is reported the plaintiff intends to try this cause again in London.

NEAR £400 has been lately sub-scribed towards making a new race-course and erecting a stand, on the ground which the corporation of Leicester have allotted for that purpose.

A WAGER of an extraordinary nature was lately decided at the back of Sadler's Wells. Two trades-men of Thames-street were to be carried fifty yards by a third, while another was to hop one hundred.—The latter won, by the other party being precipitated into a ditch, to their great mortification.

For a trifling wager, Mr. T. J—LL—FF lately undertook to run a mile in five minutes, which he performed apparently with little exertion several seconds within the prescribed time. He has since engaged to run the same distance in four minutes, and to leap a given height at stated intervals.

MATCH against time.—Saturday March 8, Lieutenant-Colonel . . . , for a wager of 500 guineas, rode from the Castle Inn, Canterbury, to the Marsh Gate, at Westminster Bridge, in three hours and twenty-five minutes, being the distance of 56 miles. The time allowed for the performance of the journey, was three hours and a half: the Colonel, consequently, won by five minutes.

SOME time ago, a dog, the property of Mrs. Wordsworth, of Wadworth, Doncaster, which had previously bitten several other dogs, and snatched at some of the servants, died under all the symptoms of the Hydrophobia. On the first alarm he had been very properly secured, so that it is hoped no further mischief will ensue. The dogs bitten, we understand, have been since destroyed.

CHANGE ringing.—On Monday, the 10th of March, 1806, a complete peal of grandsire tripples of 5040 changes, was rung in three hours and a quarter, by the following company of ringers, of Waldron, viz.—

Thos. Jones, jun.	Treble,	aged 14.
John Ranger,	2d.	aged 54.
J. Unstead, jun.	3d.	aged 16.
Edward Bristow,	4th.	aged 52.
J. Unstead, sen.	5th.	aged 52.
Thos. Jones, sen.	6th.	aged 48.
John Thompson,	7th.	aged 32.
Wm. Thompson, Tenor,		aged 25.

The bobs were called by J. Ranger.

At Norfolk Spring Assizes, William Watson, a youth of 19, was tried for stealing barley; and as his case regards a practice exceedingly mischievous, and but too prevalent amongst farmers' servants, it may be proper to notice the circumstances of it.—Mr. John Girling, farmer, of Little Hautboys, had missed corn out of his barn at various times, and accordingly, taking measures for the discovery of the offender, found, by the confession of an accomplice, a stable boy, that the prisoner had secretly gained entrance into the barn, and had taken thereout a quantity of undressed barley. It appeared, however, that the only use to which he had put this corn was the feeding his master's horses, which, when called on for his defence, he—the prisoner—described to have been reduced to a very weak state, from the want of proper and sufficient nourishment. This, however, the master positively denied to have been the case—mentioned a liberal quantity of corn as the allowance he had always given his horses, and stated the risk which the animals ran of their lives from such unwholesome food. His Lordship observed to the jury, that this was a case of an extraordinary kind, and such an one as, till then, had never come before him—his opinion was, however, that the offence could scarcely, from its nature, be considered as chargeable with a felonious intent, since the prisoner could not be said to have robbed his master. He had, indeed, stolen his master's corn, not to sell away, nor to feed his own, or any other person's horses, but his master's; and the presumption was, therefore, that however improper—and highly improper was the conduct of the prisoner in so doing—and however mischievous the consequences, yet he had still in view the benefit of his master's horses. The jury found the prisoner—Not guilty.

Edward Anderson was indicted for stealing a trap. The prosecutor, Solomon Bowers, a publican, at Outwell, stated he had set a trap to catch rabbits on a spot of the warren ground where he was authorized so to do, and had afterwards found it in the prisoner's possession. He acknowledged the trap was not his own, but only lent him. The prisoner, a young man, in his defence stated, that the witness had no right to set any trap on these grounds; that he, the prisoner, was a warrener by occupation, and by agreement had a right to half the rabbits he might kill there, on giving up the other half to the proprietor of the land. His Lordship observing it must be evident to the jury that this was a paltry case to bring before a court of justice, added, that the whole fact appeared to be, that the prosecutor had set one person's trap on another person's ground, to catch a third person's rabbits, and that there was but very little difference between him and the man he accused.—The prisoner was acquitted.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

SPECULATION.

HAZARD, a careless fellow, known
 At ev'ry gambling house in town,
 Was oft in want of money, yet
 Could never bear to run in debt;
 Because, 'twas thought no man was willing
 To give him credit for a shilling.
 Dependent on Dame Fortune's will,
 He threw the dice, or well, or ill;
 This day in rags, the next in lace,
 Just as it happen'd, sice or ace;
 Was often-times, when not a winner,
 Uncertain where to get a dinner.
 One day, when cruel Fortune's frown
 Had stript him of his last half-crown,
 Saunt'ing along, in sorry mood,
 Hungry, perhaps, for want of food;
 A parlour window struck his eye,
 Through which our hero chanc'd to spy
 A jolly round-fac'd personage,
 Somewhat about the middle age,
 Beginning a luxurious meal,
 For 'twas a noble loin of veal;
 And such a sight, I need not mention,
 Quickly arrested his attention:
 Surely, thought he, I know that face,
 I've seen it at some other place—
 I recollect, 'twas at the play,
 And there I heard some people say
 How rich this fellow was, and what
 A handsome daughter he had got!
 That dinner would exactly do,
 A loin of veal's enough for two;
 Could I but now strike out some way
 To get an introduction, eh!
 Most likely 'tis I may endeavour
 In vain, but come, I'll try, however;
 And now he meditates no more—
 Thunders a rat-tat at the door.
 The party-colour'd footman come,
 "Pray, is your master, Sir, at home?"
 "My master, Sir, 's at home, but busy."
 "Then he's engag'd," quoth Hazard,
 "is he?"

In voice as loud as he could bellow,
 "I'm very sorry, my good fellow,
 It happens so, because I could
 Your master do some little good;
 A Speculation that I know,
 Might save a thousand pounds or so;
 No matter, friend, your master tell
 Another day will do as well."
 "What's that you say?" the master
 cries,

With pleasure beaming from his eyes,
 And napkin tuck'd beneath his chin;
 Bouncing from parlour, whence within
 He'd heard those joy-inspiring sounds
 Of saving him a thousand pounds!
 "My dear Sir, what is that you say?"
 "Sir, I can call another day;
 Your dinner I've disturb'd I fear."
 "Do pray, Sir, take your dinner here;
 You'll find a welcome warm and hearty."
 "I shall intrude, Sir, on your party."
 "There's not a soul but I and you."
 "Well then, I don't care if I do."
 Our spark's design thus far completed,
 Behold him at the table seated,
 Paying away, as well he might,
 With some degree of appetite.
 Our host, who willing would have press'd
 The thousand pounds upon his guest,
 Still thought it would not be genteel
 To interrupt him at his meal,
 Which seem'd so fully to employ him,
 Talking might probably annoy him,
 So thought it better he should wait
 Till after dinner, the debate;
 And now, "the king and constitution,
 With ill success to revolution,"
 And many a warm and loyal toast,
 Had been discuss'd, when our good host
 Thought it was almost time to say,
 "Let's move the order of the day."
 Indeed he hardly could help thinking
 'Twas rather odd his guest was drinking,
 The bus'ness not a jot the nearer,
 A second bottle of Madeira;

And

And that he seem'd to sit and chatter,
 'Bout this, and that, and 't other matter,
 As if he'd not the least intention
 This thousand pound of his to mention.
 Much did he wish to give a hint,
 Yet fear not how he should begin 't;
 At length, "Sir, you've forgot, I fear,
 The bus'ness that has brought you here?
 I think you gave some intimation
 About a saving Speculation."
 "Ay, Sir—You'll find it not amiss,
 My Speculation's simply this:—
 I hear you have a daughter, Sir,"
 "A daughter! well, and what of her?
 What can my daughter have to do
 With this affair 'twixt me and you?"
 "I mean to make your daughter—craving
 Your pardon, Sir—the means of saving
 The sum I mention. You'll allow My scheme is feasible." "As how?"
 "Why, thus—I hear you've no objection
 To form some conjugal affection
 For this same daughter." "No, provided

All other matters coincided."
 "Then, Sir, I'll suit you to a hair—
 Pray, is she not extremely fair?"
 "Why—yes—there's many folks who praise her—
 But what is beauty now-a-days Sir!"
 "Ay, true Sir, nothing without wealth;
 But, come, suppose we drink her health!"
 "Indeed I've drank enough already."
 "Oh fie—Consider, Sir, a lady!
 By rights we should have drank her first.
 Pray, fill." "Well, if I must, I must."
 "And pray what age, Sir, may she be?"
 "God bless her,—she's just twenty-three."
 "Just twenty-three! faith, a rare age."
 "Sir, you were speaking of her marriage."
 "I was—and wish to know, in case
 Such an occurrence should take place,
 The sum it might be in your power
 To give with her by way of dower?"
 "Well then, Sir, this is my intent,
 If married with my own consent,
 I've no objection, on such grounds,
 With her to pay ten thousand pounds."
 "Ten thousand, Sir, I think you say?"
 "I do." "What! on the marriage day?"
 "The whole." "Then let her, Sir, be mine;
 I'll take her off your hands with nine;
 And that you'll call, I'm sure, good grounds
 For saving you a thousand pounds."

JENNY JUICY.

WHO is she? with purple pimples
 Clust'ring in her red-hot face;
 Where, instead of Love's soft dimples,
 Large carbuncles give a grace.

That is fair Miss Jenny Juicy,
 Fond of Bacchus and his vine;
 Give her drink, she'll not refuse ye,
 Tippling is to her divine.

Mark her walk—it is a stagger;
 Seldom is she sober quite;
 From the kennel oft they drag her,
 While she mutters thus in spite—

"Curse it, can't you let me slumber;
 Off, ye vile tormenting brood,
 Dragging one about like lumber;
 I only drink what does me good!"

J. M. L.

THE ANCIENTS SUPERIOR TO THE MODERNS.

THERE liv'd—tho' that is somewhat
 wide
 O'the purpose—I should say, there died
 A squire, and Wyschard was his name;
 Pictish and Saxon ancestry
 Illustrated his pedigree,
 And many a noble imp of fame:
 Yet these renowned ancestors,
 As if they had been vulgar sons of whores,
 Were long, long since, by all the world
 forgot,
 Save by himself: he knew the very spot
 Where they had each been coffin'd up to rot;
 And in his will directions gave exact,
 Amongst those venerable dads to have his carcase pack'd.
 Now deep the sexton burrows to explore
 The sepulchre that these old worthies
 hid;
 Something at last that seem'd a huge barn-door,
 But was no other than a coffin lid,
 Oppos'd his efforts; long it spread and
 wide,
 And near the upper end a crevice he espied.

Thence

Thence on his ear strange uncouth utterance broke,

As of some sullen slumberer half awoke,
Who, yawning, mutter'd inarticulate
And angry sounds; yet could not this abate

The courage of the clown: "Speak out!" quoth lie,

"Raw head and bloody bones ne'er yet affrighted me."

A thund'ring voice replies, "What miscreant knave

Dares break the sabbath of old Wyschard's grave?"

"No miscreant knave, worm-eaten Sir, am I,

But Hodge the sexton—knave! I scorn the word:

I at my honest calling work—for why?
Your kinsman's just brought down to be interr'd."

"My kinsman to be buried here?—Oh! ho!

What year of our Lord is't? fellow, let me know."

"'Tis eighteen hundred, Sir, and two."

"Aye, Goodman Sexton, say you so?

Then time on me a march hath stole;

'Twas near seven hundred years ago

That I became the tenant of this hole;
Men like myself behind I left but few;

Since then the world, I wot, is fangled all anew!

Tell me, in sooth, are other folks like thee?

For by thy voice, thou seem'st a tiny elf."

"Tiny!" quoth Hodge: "Zooks, I am six feet three!

There's no man in the hundred but myself

Can say as much;—thy namesake that is dead,

I'll warrant him, was shorter by the head."

"Thy words lack proof: I prithee, honest friend,

Thrust through this chink thy little finger's end;

Whence I may know, if thou the truth doth state,

And judge, by sample small, of thy dimensions great."

Thought Hodge—"Although I little fear the dead,

"Fool-hardy mortals perils strange environ."

His finger then with-held he, but instead
Thrust in his pick-axe nozzle, sheath'd with iron.

And he was in the right,

For at a single bite,

Old Wyschard snapt it off clean as a whistle.

"Hence, lying varlet, bear

Your pigmy corpse elsewhere:

'Twould Wyschard's grave disgrace!

In the stoutest of your race

There's no more substance than a bit of gristle!"

AN OLD STORY.

ONCE through Moorfields, at peep of day,

A troop of sportsmen took their way;

In rustic state they rode along,

A ranting purse-proud thoughtless throng;

With modish hats, and tight surtouts,

And bright steel spurs, and jemmy boots.

These in the foremost ranks appear;

Falcons, hawks, dogs, compose the rear.

A bedlamite, by chance let out,

With gaping grin admir'd the rout;

And when the cavalcade had past,

Beckon'd and baw'd to stop the last.—

"Good friend," said he, "pray let me know,

What means this sort of race-show,

And who's yon green-coat riding there,

That cracks his whip with such an air;

Is he your brother? sure he is;

For you're much like in dress and phiz."

"No, he's our squire," replied the other;

"But loves me better than a brother;

And well he may, for ne'er a man

Could train his falcons as I can:

This on my hand, though lately made,

Is quite a master of his trade,

And shews more sense, if I may say't,

Than all yon folks have in their pate;

'Tis this has brought them all together,

To try his blood this charming weather."

"Well," said the madman, "pray what hire

May you have yearly from the squire?"

"A score," said he, "of yellow boys,

Besides some other casual toys,

A waistcoat

A waistcoat lac'd, unsoil'd and clever,
Or ruffled shirts as whole as ever;
And oftentimes a lucky pounce
Tempt's him to throw me half an ounce;
Besides the best of meat and drink;
And all too little you may think,
For the fatigue that I endure
In bringing young ones to the lure;
But such an ord'nary, you know,
Is no bad thing, as markets go."

"But what's his tutor's wages yearly?"

"As much as mine, or very nearly."

"Is that the case? o'ertake your master,
Tell him from me to gallop faster;
For if our keeper gets him here,
He'll tie him down, at least, a year."

THE PARTNERS.—A TALE.

THOSE who the sweets of partnership would know,
May chance to find it out, some lines
below.

Tom Stiles and Hodge, a little time ago,

Purchas'd a barn and parted it in two.
Tom fill'd his side with grain still more and more,

But Hodge's half was empty to the floor.
As Stiles was plodding through his ground
one morn,

Towards this barn, to view the store of corn,

He chanc'd to meet his partner by the way;

Hodge held a lighted faggot in each hand;

Cries Tom, surprised, and then he made a stand,

"What dost thou want with fire-light
by day?"

God bless thy noddle, I believe it's wood,
And setting fire to that might do it good.

What cursed nonsense art thou hatching now?

Thou always wert a stupid blundering
calf,

Witness the barn, of which I've fill'd my half;

You ha'nt a grain in all the place, I vow."

Says Hodge, "I scorns the thing that is 'nt right,

I means to bring my measures to the light;

About that barn I won't be call'd a
calf;

In this here land, a body does, d'ye see,
Just as he pleases with his property—
I'll tell a what—I means to burn my half."

MY UNCLE;

OR,

THE PAWNBROKER.

WHO dwells at yonder three blue
balls,

Where poverty so often calls,
Guarding her off'rings in his walls?

My Uncle.

Who cheers the heart with "Money
Lent,"

When friends are cold, and all is spent,
Receiving only cent. per cent.?

My Uncle.

Who cares not what distress may bring,
If stol'n from beggar or from king,
And, like the sea, takes ev'ry thing?

My Uncle.

Who, wiser than each sage of yore
That alchemy would fain explore,
Can make whate'er he touches ore?

My Uncle.

Who, when the wretch is sunk in grief,
And none besides will yield relief,
Will aid the honest or the thief?

My Uncle.

Yet when detection threatens law,
Who hidden stores will open draw,
That future rogues may stand in awe?

My Uncle.

Bought wisdom is the best, 'tis clear,
And since 'tis better as more dear,
We for high prices should revere

My Uncle.

And though, to make the heedless wise,
He cheats in all he sells or buys,
To work a moral purpose tries

My Uncle.

Who, fortune's golden glare withdrawn,
When sycophants no longer fawn,
Takes all but honour into pawn?

My Uncle.

Then let us end the silly pother,
About my Granny, Father, Mother,
What kin's more prompt than any other?

My Uncle.

 Ld Fitzwilliam's b m Sally, 5 yrs old, 8st 10lb, (T. Clarkson) . . . 1 2 ds
 Sir E. Smith's gr f Betsy, 3 yrs old, 6st 5lb, (Johnson) 3 3 dr

At starting, 7 to 4 and 2 to 1 on Priscilla, and a few small bets at three to 1; and very high odds agst Betsy and the Delpini filly.—The first heat was smartly run for about three miles and a half; after which it became a very severe race between Sally and Priscilla, and won by only a neck; Betsy was beat by rather more than a clear length, and the Delpini filly waited. After this heat, some even betting between Sally and Priscilla, and very high odds against the other two; but upon the whole very little betting. For the second heat, Priscilla went off at score, and was never headed; but at the end of it was a most desperate race between her and Sally, and won by only a head. After the second heat, 6 and 7 to 4 on Priscilla.—For the third heat, Sally made play, and hard running for about two miles, when she ran on the wrong side of a post; but no blame was attached to Priscilla, as she was quite clear of Sally, who immediately pulled up: Priscilla then waited for the Delpini filly, and won within a length.
