EDUCATION OF ACHILLES.

Frontispiece to the Forty-fourth Volume of the Sporting Magazine.

Engraved by SCOTT, from a painting by REGNAULT.

AMONGST the most famous Sportsmen whose godlike characters shine in the pages of fabulous antiquity, and which mythology has so consecrated with her amusing lore, that they appear familiar to us through the veil of fable—amongst the demi-gods and heroes of Greece, Hercules, Castor and Pollux, Meleager, Perseus, Theseus, and his son Hippolytus, we find ACHILLES, the fated son of Thetis, the mortal enemy of Ilium, and the surviving rival of Hector.

Antiquity held him in great veneration, and the charms of Homer's poetry gave immortality to what never had perhaps a mortal existence. The education of Achilles was entrusted to the Centaur Chiron, from whom he learned the only arts known at that time, the chace and music. The bow and the lyre were placed alternately in the little hands of the promising boy; and the wilds of Thessalia, the woods and hills, responded alternately to the soothing modula-tions of harmony, or to the dreadful twang of the deathful
bow. The painters and sculptors of antiquity have often chosen this theme for the object of their chisels or pencils; and many of them with success. Our Artist has seized the fleeting instant when the youth, ready to let the arrow escape from the reluctantly-bending bow, still marks the position of the Centaur's hands; this, by an ingenious conception of the painter, shows his attitude with much advantage in using an arrow instead of the bow, which he has placed in the hand of his pupil. By this the artist has avoided similarity and vulgarity, and has obtained the useful opportunity of crossing the lines in a very elegant manner.—We need not observe with what skill the painter has contrasted the youthful body of the young hero with the manly form of the Centaur—and that the serpent on the craggy rock, and the dead lion at the feet of the learning pupil, are proofs of the progress he has already made in the art of archery.

ARABIAN HORSES.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

PERMIT me, through the channel of your Magazine, to offer a few observations respecting three Arabian horses, lately brought to this country by Captain Christopher.

The chief object I have in view is to call the attention of breeders on the turf to the horses in question, especially as a considerable degree of prejudice is known to exist among some of them, against breeding from any thing that bears the appellation of an Arabian. This prejudice has doubtless arisen from the impositions that have been practised in denominating all foreign horses as Arabians.

Of late years great numbers of Spanish horses have been imported, and which, in common with Persians, Turks, Barbs, &c. are all styled Arabians. The Spanish horse is undoubtedly the weakest and the slowest of any breed whatever. His form is, in all respects, the very reverse of that which constitutes a good and perfect horse, and whoever breeds from such a stallion, will be sure to be disappointed in the produce.

By referring to the Stud Book, it will be seen that all our best blood is derived from the Godolphin Arabian; nevertheless our turf breeders refuse to adopt the same system at the present day, and the consequence is, that an Arabian stallion, however excellent in his form and properties, never has a first-rate mare put to him.

The peculiar excellence of the true Arabian horse consists in possessing great strength without the incumbrance of weight. This is particularly manifest in the ample and well turned loins, and the low and forward hips of this breed, rendering them what horsemen term good barrelled horses.

Captain Christopher's horses are a grey, a chesnut, and a brown bay; and though all differing somewhat from each other in their general outline, are three most capital animals. The elegance and beauty of the grey is unrivalled by any horse in this country; the brown is the strongest blood-horse of his inches that can well be imagined, with most excellent legs and feet, and great speed; and the chesnut is an animal which no true judge of a horse can fail to admire. With a clean, well-formed head, and a neck as light as a gelding's, shoulders shoulders muscular, and lying very oblique towards his back, a muscular and long arm, and a singularly short shank, loins and hind quarters of perfect symmetry; he exhibits all the characteristics of an English racer, and cannot fail of proving a most valuable stallion.

The following, I understand, is a list of the races he has won in India, the detail of which may perhaps be interesting to your readers.

In the year 1810, (then 4 years old) he ran for the weight for age Plate against Mr. Thornhill's English horse Blue Ruin, Mr. Lumis-daine's English horse Pepper Pot, and General Fuller's Arabian horse Nutmeg, and won his race easy.

On the following day he ran for the Give and Take Plate against Captain Keating's grey horse Neck or Nothing, and beat him a distance.

In November following, he won the Give and Take Plate at Murat, receiving half forfeit from Mr. Thornhill's horse Blue Ruin.

In June, 1811, he received forfeit from Mr. Steers's English horse Capsicum.

In the following month he received forfeit from Captain Swinton's Arabian horse Cuthbert.

In the month of September he beat Captain Swinton's horse Cuthbert, giving him 21lb.

In the month of October he won the Give and Take Plate at Barely; and in November he won the same Plate at Murat.

Captain Christopher's horses are at present to be seen at No. 51, Southampton-row, Bloomsbury; and I have no hesitation in stating, that the sight of them will sufficiently repay any good judge of horses for his trouble.—I am, Sir, your most obedient servant,

RICHARD LAWRENCE.

BOXING.

An Account of the Battle between DONNELLY and HALL, at the Curragh, on Wednesday the 14th September, 1814, for a Purse of One Hundred Guineas.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

THE within account of the battle between Donnelly and Hall is correct, should you insert it in your Magazine next month. The writer was present at the Curragh, and took down the minute account of same without partiality to either.

—I am, Sir, AN AMATEUR.

The concourse of people that flocked to witness this combat, was more than ever was remembered on a former occasion; the numerous vehicles of all description, from the splendid barouche to the jolting taxed cart, were all in rapid motion; and the pedestrians who were flocking to witness this tremendous milling match, would be futile in the extreme to imagine. It seemed as if all the inhabitants of Dublin were on the alert, and the gentlemen of the fancy were unusually prominent. Every thing being ready for the contest, the combatants made their appearance in a twenty-two foot ring, attended by a number of pugilistic heroes, and were greeted with reiterated applause from the anxious spectators. Hall was seconded by Messrs. Carter and Painter; and Donnely by Mr. Kelly and Captain Barclay, brother to the famous pedestrian.

1st Round. Fancy was never more attentive or anxiously interested than upon the present occasion, and every look of the combatants was turned to account. Donnelly made a left-handed hit, which fell short, and, after an irregular rally, Hall fell.

2d Round. Hall stood up heroically, and a smile of confidence was seen upon his gallant brow. Donnelly made a feint run, in which Hall met him with a left-handed facer, which split his lip, and drew the first blood. Donnelly ran in and bored him down.

3d Round. The claret was perceiving to issue from the mouth of Donnelly upon commencing this round. Donnelly aimed a blow at his opponent's head, but fell short; they closed, and Hall slipped, and when down, Donnelly shewed a malicious design by endeavouring to run his knee on Hall's body.

4th Round. Skill and courage were pre-eminent on both sides. Donnelly rallied, but Hall rendered his hits unavailing, and put in a severe right-handed blow on the neck; in terminating this round Donnelly threw him.

5th Round. The talents of both the combatants were extremely conspicuous on this round, but Donnelly had the best of it; he gave Hall a left-handed facer, which completely confused him; in closing, Hall was on the ground.

6th Round. Donnelly made play right and left, but was stopped, and in rallying, they both slipped down.

7th Round. Several sharp blows on both sides, but Hall fell, and was struck down by his antagonist;

there was a general cry of foul play.

8th Round. Donnelly, in making his hit, lost his distance, when Hall returned a severe blow at his head, and fell upon his knees.

9th Round. Donnelly, not so confident in coming in, gave in his head, and followed Hall over the ring; good blows given and returned; Hall once more fell.

10th Round. Some severe blows passed without effect, when Donnelly bored his adversary down against the ropes.

11th, 12th, and 13th Round. Donnelly shewed evident symptoms of weakness, and gave his head in, and bored his opponent to the ropes, but seemed to disregard it; he stuck close to his man till he was bored down.

14th Round. Rallying still the most prominent feature, but Donnelly's superior strength bored Hall down.

15th Round. Hall and Donnelly both made play at the same instant, when a right-handed blow told on the head of Donnelly; some good blows were exchanged, and this round was rather in favour of Hall; he was bored down by Donnelly, and when down, he struck him and cut his head. The umpires immediately ordered Hall to withdraw, and declared the battle in his favour, Donnelly having, contrary to the rules of pugilism, struck his adversary three times when on the ground.

Thus ended the battle. The spectators who witnessed this match, were very much disappointed, as they expected a great contest; but the general opinion prevails, if Donnelly had milled his opponent, it would not add much credit to his pugilistic career, as Hall was nearly three stone less weight weight than Donnelly, and it seemed evident during this battle, that Hall was merely playing with his antagonist, in order to weary him down to near his own weight, and then to have a close contest. Various were the reports which were circulated in Dublin the day of the fight; rumours were spread so early as three o'clock of Hall's getting a severe beating, and had his jaw-bone broken; others would have it, that, in consequence of a severe blow from Donnelly, some of his ribs were broken. Those malicious rumours were increasing beyond exaggeration, until the arrival of Hall in town that night at nine o'clock, whose appearance was very strange to those who were led to believe the ill-founded facts that were set forward. He was not hurt in the least, and called on several of his friends that night, in order to alleviate their fears respecting his safety.

Another Account, from the Irish Papers.

DUBLIN, SEPT. 15.—Yesterday, the long-expected contest, between Hall, an English bruiser, of the Belcherian School, and Donnelly, an Irish carpenter, as we are informed, born and educated in Townsend-street, took place at the Curragh. The concourse of spectators was beyond calculation; such an assemblage has not been witnessed by the oldest inhabitant of the county of Kildare. It was computed at not less than forty thousand. At one o'clock the ring was formed by ropes, when the combatants entered. Donnelly first appeared, amidst thunders of applause, attended by his seconds, Captain Barclay and Mr. Kelly.—Donnelly was under training of the latter gentleman for some weeks,

The combatants shook hands, and after taking a glass of some cordial with each other, again shook hands; a solemn silence ensued, when the regular set-to commenced, which lasted twenty-one minutes, after sparring fifteen minutes (in England it would not be called fighting). Donnelly is a most powerful man, six feet high, weighing 13st. 7lbs.; his antagonist is a much slighter man, with more science, and weighing two stones less. Fifteen rounds were fought, in every one of which Hall was knocked down, or at any rate he was found on the ground. Donnelly received no injury, except one trifling cut on the lip, which certainly drew first blood; he was found on the ground once, but that was believed to be a slip, in consequence of the blow he felled his opponent with. After the fifteenth round, "Foul play!" was loudly called, on the part of Hall, who, it was alledged, had been struck by Donnelly more than once while down. "Foul play!" was also exclaimed by the partizans of Donnelly, who insisted that Hall had finessed, and fallen frequent without provocation.

Thus, after the fifteenth round, Hall, without acknowledging defeat, retired from the ring, proclaiming foul play—and, as we have before stated, Donnelly complained also of unfair play on the part of Hall. Thus the business terminated. The result must be terminated by the Jockey Club. The purse was for one hundred guineas; the subscription on the ground at least 100l. more. Odds before the combatants entered the ring were 60l. to 40l. on Hall; on the sod, 25l. to 20l.: daring the battle battle no betting. Hall appeared very much blown during the entire of the contest. Donnelly did not appear much exhausted.

The whole of this city was last night one universal scene of tumultuous joy, and bonfires were seen in all directions, in consequence of the success of Donnelly.

Third Account, from the same source.

Hall fought all on the defensive, Donnelly closed on him every round. Hall never gave a blow, only when he could not help it; Donnelly chased him round the ring, and was always, from necessity, obliged to be the assailant.—The first five rounds, Hall fell; 6th round, Hall was knocked down; 7th round, both fell, by each missing their blows; 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th, and 12th, Hall fell; 13th round, Hall was knocked down again; 14th and 15th, Hall fell; and on the 16th round, Hall fell, and he then retired from the ring, it is said, in consequence of a blow he received while down. In rallying, Hall struck his blows right forward, and Donnelly struck round. Donnelly is far superior in strength; Hall's object was to irritate and put him out of wind, but Donnelly did not lose his temper, and remained cool. The sixteen rounds were fought in eighteen minutes. Hall had no chance with Donnelly.

An Irish paper, the Dublin Evening Post, states, the Turf Club have since decided, that the bets depending on the above match be withdrawn, and the purse divided between the combatants, both of them having deviated from the technical line of fair play. Donnelly and Carter are to fight at the Curragh in April next.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

THE insertion of numerous articles in your publication, reprobating cruelty to that noble and useful animal, the horse (and indeed towards every other animal), induces me to solicit room for a few observations on the brutal treatment experienced by that more patient and humble, yet still valuable creature, the ass. No one visiting either of the watering places on the Kentish coast, can avoid having his pity excited, and indignation aroused, by witnessing the extreme cruelty inflicted on these valuable substitutes for the horse. Forced into harness, and worked beyond their strength, they are constrained to drag the worthless carcasses, perhaps, of four beings, the utmost extent of whose thoughts (if we may judge of them from their actions), appears to be the speedy conveyance to their place of destination. Unable to accomplish the task to the satisfaction of their drivers, owing perhaps more to deficiency of power than want of inclination, a species of torture is inflicted on them with sticks little inferior in size to a broomstick, under the avowed determination of "curing them of their obstinacy." At length, after the most cruel flagellation, the journey is performed—one would then expect the drivers would bestow a little hay and water on them, if only from motives of policy, to enable them the better to return home; but instead of this, they are tied together (if more than one should come to the same place), and there left whole hours exposed to the burning sun, while their drivers, drivers, under the shelter of some friendly house, are regaling themselves, and perhaps boasting of their prowess in conquering "a Donkey."

"Oh! 'tis excellent
To have a giant's strength; but it is ty-rannous
To use it like a giant."

On^r their return, after the same discipline, they are restored to their owners, who (equally wanting in humanity with their customers) instantly send them out to undergo the like treatment, should another opportunity offer; and while light continues, they find no cessation from labour, the same animals being let out three or more times each day.

These hasty observations may possibly cause some of your more able correspondents to advocate the cause of these valuable creatures, and to propose some plan for preventing the recurrence of such disgusting cruelty.—I am, Sir, your constant reader,

HIGHFLYER.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

YOUR correspondent, "OLD Sus," in May last, most erroneously affirms Highflyer was both beat and paid forfeit in the year 1777, at three years old. I beg, for the information of your sporting friends, through the medium of your Magazine, to contradict this most positively. The colt to which he alludes was by Herod, out of Marotte, and named by Sir John Moore, whereas Highflyer was out of Rachel, and never was the property of Sir J. Moore. They were both bred by Lord Bolingbroke, but two different colts, and this, perhaps, occasioned the error in the index to the Racing Calendar of 1777, which has evidently led OLD Sus wrong.

—Your obedient servant,

ARCHERY.

THE Earl of Aylesford has renewed, with full effect, the sports of archery in the forest of Arden, which the late Lord, his father, so long and ardently patronised. On Monday, the 29th ult. the annual meeting of the woodmen of Arden commenced on Meriden Heath, when the gold medal for the best target shot was won by C. E. Repington, Esq. of Amington. On the Wednesday, the silver arrow at nine score yards, was won by J. Eardly Wilmot, Esq. of Berkswell. On the Friday, the silver bugle was shot for at eleven score and ten yards, and won by the Earl of Aylesford, who was also Captain of Numbers.—The meeting was numerously attended by many of the first families of the county. There were balls at the Forest Hall on the Wednesday and Friday evenings.

THE VOCABULARY.

COME IN;—COME IN HERE;— or, The Whistle;—is to keep him in at setting off, or to bring him in from any distance upon beat immediately, for some purpose to be indicated to him when come in, so as to put him upon heat elsewhere, &c. The abstract meaning, at all times to be conveyed, being the check of self-will.

BACK;—BACK HERE;—must never be confounded with the above: its meaning is, that he is to hunt back to try his ground over again: adhere to it, and he will soon begin to understand it in this sense, much to the advantage of his own intellect: the whistle, with the wave of the hand, is, in quartering, synonymous.

HEY AWAY;—HEY ON, good dog!—is a general encouragement to general heat.

WARE HARE;—WARE MUTTON;
—are checks of decisive recall from most unlawful pursuits: for the former of which, if admitted, the tutor ought to be flogged; and,
for the latter, the pupil hanged.
Observe, the ware is to have the full broad sound of the south: it fills the mouth nobly.

WARE LARK;—a summons to break off the pupil from trifling upon a worthless haunt; which, during the obvious rising of the bird before him, he is to be challenged with, in order to rouse him to a higher sense of discernment and more dignified pursuits.* If this trifling should amount to drawing into point, let him be shamed out of the practice by a harsh tone of reproach, by a smack of the whip, and by a show on the part of the tutor of an advance on beat,
with Hold up! &c.

GONE! GONE;—a summons to be delivered in a quick and cheerful tone of voice, accompanied with a wave of the hand, in show of advance on beat by the tutor, to call off the pupil from lingering away his time upon the workings of an old foil, when, from having observed the birds steal off or otherwise, it is clearly manifest that the game is gone. In the advanced stages of education, when the dog has acquired some discrimination, and has got some notion of the progress of a haunt, this may be applied with no small advantage to the cultivation of intellect; but with a younger subject, whose business it is never to rattle away from the smallest chance of find, it is not quite sound practice, and is advisable only on the very spot where the bird has just been killed to him.

HOLD UP, good dog!—HOLD UP;

* On the moors, where the small heath-bird or ling-bird disturbs the attention of a young dog, the phrase of ware bird is in pretty general use for this purpose. It obtains too, I believe, in some other countries: but, as I have a superior use for that phrase presently, I beg to supersede its meaner application altogether, and to offer the ware LARK! for it, upon all occasions. In the south this will, nine times in ten, denote the very object of interruption; and it will be better elsewhere to admit the misnomer, than to puzzle the pupil with distinctions in natural history.

—an encouragement when he appears to find, or when he touches upon game, to get onward; or, to break him off from a waste of time upon a false haunt.

HAVE A CARE;—a caution when you perceive him getting on too fast upon a find, or when he presses rashly the advance on point. During this advance, as you bring him up under close command, a slight smack or click of the tongue, such as is used to urge the speed of a horse, immediately succeeded by a low double whistle, or shaken note from the lips, whose modulations may keep his attention engaged and regulate his motions, will sufficiently express the alternate notices of advance and check; and on your near approach to game, inasmuch as they create less disturbance, should be substituted in the place of the two last phrases.

TAKE HEED;—a caution or challenge of still stronger import, at sound of which he ought to be instantly on full stop,—stanch. This authoritative challenge must be given whenever you perceive him, by his action, so close as to be in the instant risk of a spring; likewise upon every occasion of blundering up a bird, whether from heedlessness or accident; and the use of the whip, when called for in either of these cases, must be invariably interlarded with it, as being a word with which the idea of this said whip is ever after to be inseparably and formidably connected. Let me observe here that, for this as well as other notices of restraint, the keen crack of the whip is to be accepted as an expressive synonym. It conveys more intelligibly to the pupil's ear, than can be done by the feeble paraphrase of the most powerful voice, what he has to expect for disobedience. For which reason, if there were no other, the thong should not be too light, and the lash kept in smacking order.

WARE CHASE;—the challenge for the crime committed; to be vollied out upon the instant with all the powers of voice which the tutor is master of; and to the tune of which, re-thundered in his ears, he must have this vice, and every tendency towards it (there is no other method), most effectually flogged out of him.

DOWN CHARGE;—the word of command instantly after fire; to which I do expect from the pupil, his perfect and dutiful obedience; whether the fire be to a point or not, I do insist upon it: if he be ranging off at a distance, and you have a casual shot, still I do require it of him. In every view of utility, as well as of beauty, it forms the tutor's triumph. Be it yours, therefore, invariably to arrest him with it, even at the utmost limit of his range, fixed and immovable, his eye eagerly bent on you, watching, with impatience watching, the motions of your reloading, but still waiting the signal of the hand or voice, to be given before you stir from the spot, (if you move, the charm is over), as the warrant for his coming in direct for your further orders.

SEEK DEAD;—a notice for eager close inquiry after what he may have seen fall, or for what he is to take your word for having seen. This notice to be issued as you bring him up and put him on the haunt, and repeatedly sounded as you again and again recall him over the ground, with Back here, back!—SEEK DEAD—good dog! and as you continue to move along with him and keep him up to the unwearied search; in order to fix his his attention to what he is never to give up, and to engage the most determined perseverance on his part to make it out. One bird thus found, after half an hour of such undefeated inquiry, is inestimable, in the certainty with which you thus, for ever after, establish the retrieve.

WARE BIRD;—a check from a dash upon sight, or upon flutter, of a bird which he thus conceives within the reach of an instant gripe.*

DEAD;—WARE DEAD;—a check against a similar dash or snap, or against mouthing or foiling the game, as found by himself, or as laid down before him, in defiance of his attempt to touch it. This note of dead! will be converted, as he advances in tuition, into a signal of conscious mutual triumph; whilst, with a deliberate pause on the part of the tutor, inductive of forbearance upon that of the pupil, you gently take up the bird, smooth down its feathers to his nose, but Ware snap!—caress him with “DEAD! good dog!—DEAD!” and pocket it at leisure in his view.

DOWN;—In point of order, perhaps, this ought to have taken precedence of the whole, as forming so material a part of the preparatory treatment of the pupil, even before you take him into the field; yet, as being of much general use, may not improperly come in at the conclusion. It is the word of imperious command, under which he is to crouch close, and that, if possible, without being held down, whilst he is receiving discipline, or under lecture. It is of most immediate use under the head of Down charge; and of general application, as an instant call of check upon any sudden violence.

In the above catalogue of terms, I have purposely avoided the introduction of any which are not already warranted by what I conceive to be the best and most generally established authorities; and you will not therefore, I believe, meet with any thing in it with which you are not, as a sportsman, in some measure acquainted: it is in the precision of their application alone that you will find any thing of novelty; and in this respect I must rely upon a previous docility on your part, most attentively, to break in yourself. Its further amplification, as may be called for by circumstances, must be produced by the varying tones and sudden breaks of the voice; an extension of language which will be wonderfully well understood by the dog. For which purpose a variety of little trains of subsidiary words, or colloquial expletives, may be occasionally called in: such as Good dog;—good boy, &c.; or, to be set in the opposite key, Will you then? How dare you?—Ah, you brute!

* If a dash upon the ground, or snap at a bird struggling to rise, were never excited, excepting in consequence of fire, this phrase, in the sense here applied, might be spared, and the use of the next phrase, of ware dead, might be extended as a general check upon this lawless attempt to seize: but I have seen manifest advantages, in the pause of awakened discernment, from thus keeping perfectly distinct the idea of restraint from the dash at a bird exposed to his eye, or in the act of fluttering to rise, and that conscious forbearance over the dead game which is the subject of the next and last commandment.

&c.: but as they do not refer to specific duties, and may be considered only as the vehicles of these tones or breaks by which the various degrees of approbation or of reproof are to be conveyed, I have not admitted them in form, from a disinclination thus indefinitely to encumber my vocabulary.

Of the whole of this class of words, however, I would recommend to the tutor to be as sparing as possible; and that they be not permitted to obtrude themselves so conspicuously upon the ear, as to rob the direct word of command of the strong and marking emphasis which is due to it, or to create a confusion on the subject of the precept intended to be inculcated; avoiding, as much as may be, all circumlocutory discourtings and admonitions, and seeking rather to confine himself within the habitual limits of the above nomenclature; which, with a view to the clear separation of duties and explicit communication by the voice, I have, not without some consideration, thrown together as of general use, and which I now offer for your adoption.

In affixing precision to the terms of this vocabulary, I have, in fact, combined the rules also of conduct; exhibiting thereby a summary of duties, which will have the recommendation of brevity, at least: on which account it is perhaps the only part of these sheets that you will peruse a second time; yet, without the illustrations they contain, in the clear exemplification of precepts, you would not, I am convinced, sufficiently have understood my meaning. To the detail of those illustrations therefore I have now to request a retrospect; by the lights reflected from which, you will be enabled the better to make an estimate of my system; of the relation of its parts and of its principles: awaiting the due appreciation of which, by your reducing it to practice, I have only to add a few general maxims, or rules of conduct, by way of touching some points which have not been within the scope of these elucidations, or of more completely enforcing some leading principle. Like other institutes of more serious import, I shall throw them into the form of negations; to the peremptory tone of which, if you should be disposed to start objections, you will be pleased to recollect, that the subject is of a nature upon which a man may readily enough claim the privilege of being a little dogmatical.—[The maxims here referred to by the author, we gave in our last Number.]

THIS is really a good book. Ecce iterum! What, our old friend Col. George Hanger, whose first pamphlet, probably, we well recollect at twenty years distance—“Anticipation of the Freedom of Brabant;” and whose subsequent lucubrations have occasionally added to the amusement and instruction of our volumes? In the present work, dedicated, however, entirely to useful purposes, this eccentric genius cannot intirely tie up his vein, but is involuntarily and absolutely impelled to let the gas escape, and fly off at tangents, here and there, although by no means in so rich and diffusive a measure, as in certain of his other publications. At any rate, readers with a decent portion of the animal visibile in their composition, are compelled to smile, and not seldom to approve; yet, in one instance in the book before us, and one only, we are, in fair and honest truth, and indeed common sense, compelled to disapprove. We shall, in the proper place, assign our reasons, submitting them fairly to the Colonel's candour, of which we by no means think meanly. The present, like all the rest of the Colonel's tracts, is written in a loose, desultory, and inartificial method, tout a fait à-la-mode of "the mob of gentlemen who write with ease," and as an economical and useful treatise, would not have been at all the worse for a regular table of contents and a moderate index: but as such a book as this, with all its faults upon its head, is ever to be preferred to a stupid, heavy, and useless performance, however regularly and scientifically it may be set forth and arranged, even by Martimus Scriblerus himself, we will accept pot luck, and at any rate, for this once, excuse the author.

Colonel Hanger having so frequently and unreservedly laid the state of his private affairs before the public, we thence derive a degree of right to canvas that otherwise indecorous topic of publication. In this view we cannot forbear expressing our surprise, shall we add also regret, that a man of the Colonel's active and intelligent faculties of body and mind, a member also of the aristocracy of rank, and even the companion of Princes, a man, besides, who has served, and always seems to have demonstrated the inclination; should, through life, be left in the back ground, whilst so many idiots, and scoundrels, and pimps, and parasites, have been patronised, and enabled to enjoy all the luxuries and good things, together with the respectabilities and dignities of life, independently of the slightest pretence of legitimate desert. Undoubtedly, we may trace the original cause of Col. H.'s misfortunes, to the imprudence of his youth, in dissipating instead of improving his patrimony, in a country too where his elders ought to have instructed him it is proverbial, that a man without property is nothing, whatever may be his personal merits or pretensions. Et genus et virtus nisi cum re, vilior alga est—is to the full as true in modern Britain, as it was in ancient Rome; and such is the opinion of all foreigners respecting this country. The Colonel's too notorious want of reserve also, both in personal conduct and public appeals through the press, universally construed into a breach of decorum and due respect for the public, may, and indubitably has had a silent, but disastrous influence on his fortunes. Too open and ardent declarations during the ominous era of the last twenty years, in which, hush! has been the word, and num the order of the day, even a novice in life must have perceived to be the most sure and effectual closers of the door of preferment. A certain virtue, ever a pearl of great price among us, and always at par, has of late risen to a high premium—.

Hypocrisy—the thrivenest calling,
The only saint's bell tha' tolls all in.

But enough of this—peradventure too much. Let us, from the character and personal concerns of the the author, proceed to his book, in the dissecting of which, we propose to shew no mercy, where mercy may not be due. The queer title, which we rather wish had been run—Colonel Hanger to the world! puts us in mind of a certain other kindred burlesque. The dedication to Mr. Coke, is rational and handsome. The commencement of the book excites a recollection of things long past, and a co-incidence of sentiment, between the author and reviewer, of a pleasing nature. We therefore transcribe the passages—

" I shall begin by making known the most useful medicine for horses that I am acquainted with. I have constantly used it for above thirty years, and, may in truth say, I have given it one hundred times. I shall relate how I first proved its surprising efficacy. Above thirty years ago, when I was confederate on the turf with my friend Mr. Robert Pigott, when his celebrated horse Shark was at his best—Mr. Pigott trusting the whole conduct of his stables to me, I came some days before the Meetings, to try his horses and my own, and to see his horse Shark take his last sweat, before he ran with Lord Abingdon's Leviathan, for a very large sum of money we both had depending on that race.

" Shark went through his sweat at the dawn of day very well, and to my perfect satisfaction; after which he was taken home, fed, and locked up till twelve o'clock at noon. At twelve o'clock, when the trainer, Thomas Price, and myself came into his stable, we found all his legs swelled, his hind legs very much indeed, quite up to the hocks, and his fore legs considerably. I was much alarmed, and told Tom Price to keep the door locked, that none of the boys might see the condition he was in, and that I would send a servant to Mr. Pigott, to inform him that he might get his money off.

" Price said, ' Sir, you are alarmed at that which is of no consequence whatever. Horses' legs, after sweating, frequently fly, and I assure you, I have had many horses more swelled than Shark is. Provided his legs are not fine by to-morrow night, I will suffer death: and to prove to you my sincerity, I will, if you will allow me, stand every shilling you have on the race; and I know you have a very large sum depending. I will give him something which by to-morrow night, shall make his legs as fine as they were yesterday.' ' You shall give him nothing,' said I, ' unless you tell me what the medicine is composed of.' ' It is the most simple and innocent of medicines, Sir: I will write it down for you, and you shall go yourself to the apothecary's and have it made up, and see it given to him yourself. It is this: one pound of nitre, and half a pound of sulphur, (flower of brimstone) mixed up into a mass with molasses.' For Shark, I had it made up with honey, being so valuable a horse; but I never have given it to any other horse, except made up with molasses; and I look both on the honey and molasses, as only vehicles to give the nitre and sulphur. Before one o'clock at noon I gave Shark a ball of it, as large as a good-sized hen's egg; at night another, next morning another; and in the evening about five o'clock, another. At night, when we shut the stable up, we could scarcely perceive that his legs were at all swelled; and at day-break the next morning, his legs were as fine fine as they ever had been. 'He had two balls given him the first two days, but only one every day after, until the day he started for the match, which was seven days after he had taken his sweat. His exercise was stopped only two days, during which time he was only walked, which, I am convinced, benefited him, for he was a delicate horse. All running horses and hunters must be well purged; if they are not, they will never stand their work, without flying to pieces, as the grooms vulgarly call it.'

The present writer, without the honour of being known to Col. H. well knew him personally in those days, and by some accident or other, now forgotten, one of the Colonel's great sticks fell into his possession, which he kept, giving it the name of the baby, probably twenty years. He can boast also of having been equally fond of Shark the race horse, as the Colonel himself. On the cause of that horse's legs swelling in the manner described, after taking his sweat, a too common event, the author apparently has not very distinct ideas, as is more particularly evident by the medicine which he recommends, but which, in its proper indications, is most excellent. In all probability, Shark had run a five-mile sweat, with twelve or fifteen stone of dead and living weight upon his back, enough surely to oppress, inflame, and disorder the tone of the muscular fibres in his lower limbs, and cause them to swell! This accident is said, and with reason, frequently to happen from the horse not having been sufficiently purged and cleansed; but to our certain knowledge, it is equally probable to result from the severity of the exercise, and extremely improbable that a horse of the high consequence of him under consideration, should have been neglected with respect to his physic. No doubt, the medicine given acted as a cooler, and the horse did well; still, both nitre and sulphur are medicines of the debilitating class, and the horse, it may be well supposed, was already sufficiently debilitated from the excess of his labour. We should, in this case, have preferred such as are styled cordial articles, with the addition of a mild diuretic, having repeatedly seen race-horses after a hard sweat, not only with swelled legs but lost appetite, and every symptom of the debility arising from over exertion. Farther, bandage and walking exercise were the true specifics.—Shark was truly, as the Colonel represents him, a delicate horse, although generally a good feeder; yet, notwithstanding, travelling excepted, he probably went through more work public and private, than any other racer of his time. He was also, as the present writer was often informed at that time, an extremely pleasant horse to ride, running with his neck extended to the utmost, and in his canter, alternately thrusting out his head and returning it towards his chest in the most playful way, and most pleasant to the rider's hand, the horse having the finest and most delicate mouth that can be conceived, at the same time of that degree of firmness and strength in the bars, to enable him to endure, and even enjoy all the needful pulls. This author may find very substantial reasons, in our opinion, for purging hacks, and even draught horses, in a treatise of some years standing, as also some practical information on breeding and training the race-horse, which has, indeed, been honoured with considerable attention by the reflecting few upon the turf.

But we will take a leap to page 43, in order to have another and a parting ride upon Old Shark, the mutual hobby horse of this author and ourselves. He there gives an account of running the horse a private trial, from the Ditch-in, against his own horse St. George, by Dragon, Salopian, and Jack of Hilton, both by Marsk, and Mr. Vernon's Atalanta, a north country mare, which we remember very well, little more than fourteen hands high. She was by Match'em, and a middling runner, speed her best. Shark gave them all twenty-one pounds, the mare excepted, and to her seventeen pounds; which it must have been evident he was able to do, and beat them cantering; for the whole of them were far below his rank upon the turf, and the mare in particular, scarcely good enough to win any thing at Newmarket. Jack Oakley, then the greatest butcher upon the turf, who should not have ridden a prize Jack-ass gratis for us, and who was sure to shorten every high-stomached horse a full quarter or half a distance over the course, by his unfeeling and thick-headed use of the whip and spur, it seems, rode Shark this trial, the result of which cannot be held very extraordinary. But we will remind Col. H. of one of the most extraordinary trials that ever was run at Newmarket, which occurred but two or three years previous, and in which Shark was concerned and beaten. It was the first trial of his friend Pigott's three racers, HONEST KITT, SHARK, and MASQUERADE, all by Marsk; and seldom, indeed, has it fallen to the lot of a gentleman of the turf to have at once three such cattle to try. From length of time the writer of this has forgotten the name of the trial horse, which, probably, Col. H. may recollect, but the result was, Honest Kitt ran in first and first, and the distance not being short, Old Peggy last. This account was given by a lad who rode, or was present at the trial, and who lived afterwards some years in the service of the present writer. Mr. Piggott unfortunately lost Honest Kitt. If the reader will pardon the garrulity of us old sporting codgers, he shall have yet a mouthful more of Shark. Col. H. observes—"I do not believe there was ever a better horse than Mr. Robert Pigott's Shark, excepting Eclipse, which was a very uncommon horse." But the Devonshire Childers, beyond all doubt, and Bonny Black, in probability, ought likewise to have been excepted. It will be more safe to decide, that Shark stood in the front of the next class to those, since it is impossible we can overlook the great and equal public performances of Snap, Squirrel, and others, but more particularly of that wonderful little horse Mark Antony, whose good natured, caressing, and playful disposition, had always a strong hold upon our hearts. There is farther, perhaps, a consideration which has not even yet had due weight in our turf system; we allude to the comparative size and ability to carry weight, in race horses.—What an immense superiority of natural powers and goodness must such a small horse as Anthony possess, over the large ones, and those the best racers of his day, which he beat at even weights. Honest Kitt, as has been said, beat Shark at even weights, in their trial; it was asserted, that Johnny, by Match'em, likewise, which dropped dead in his race over the Beacon Course, with Shark, had beaten him, Shark running extremely distressed, with his tongue half way out of his mouth. He was afterwards beaten, but whether against his will or not, it is impossible now to say, by Ratcatcher, a three-year-old, over the course; and when past his prime, fairly beaten, no doubt, by the five-year-olds, Dictator, Pretender, and Dorimant. But he never had fair play according to report, no horse at Newmarket being more harassed with both public and private work; yet his legs, immediately before his departure from Tattersall's for America, were as fine as when he sucked his dam, and his action perfectly free. The Colonel's "test of speed" in racing trials, twenty-one pounds, appears to us high indeed. It is to make assurance double sure.

K k beat

LEGAL SPORTING.

To the Editor.

SIR,
I confess, since the days of the storming of Paris, I have not seen any thing with more terror and dismay, than in reading in the Game List for Middlesex, that Sir Vicary Gibbs had taken out his licence to kill and destroy game.

I knew, indeed, that Sir Alexander Thompson, Knt. and Judge, was an old sportsman and very excellent shot; but to have another Judge enter the field, with a gun and a brace of pointers, determined at all hazards on exterminating that dangerous race of criminals, the partridges, was a degree of bold patriotism that could scarcely have been expected at his years.

If this laudable rage, however, should extend itself farther upon the Bench, would it not be desirable that the obsolete French words used by the Crier of the Court, Oyez! Oyez! Oyez! should be changed into the more appropriate exclamation of To! ho! On the hearing of which, counsel, attorneys, witnesses, &c &c. all that were well and judiciously disciplined, would be down in an instant; when Sir Vicary being properly charged, might let fly at the Jury, as at a whole covey at once.

But, Sir, as it would be very hard upon a Judge who had been all the morning travelling "over brake and brier," that he should be expected to come into Court in all the old cumbersome paraphernalia of his office, I will, before I close my letter, endeavour to suggest something of a habit betwixt law and shooting—something in the Light Bob way, that may enable him to save time, and do both businesses at once.

Sir Vicary's taking out a Sporting License, has made a great stir amongst the profession; particularly the older part of it. Many of these respectable gentlemen, who had slumbered amidst dust and cobwebs, in the dark chambers of the Inns of Court, as Serjeants at Law, had no idea of coming forward, as Serjeants at Arms, at last.

But this Sir Vicary, entering the field as a sportsman, has given a new turn to their ideas entirely.

Lord Erskine, we understand, has declared, that he has no objection to "Sporting at Fair Game;" and has been induced sometimes to quit his gig, on his road.

road to Hampstead, to beat the bushes in quest of it.

And the Lord Chancellor has been lately heard to say, that he sees no objection (no legal objection whatever) to taking an hour's amusement, provided he had time, and that taking out a license was not so expensive; but that should he be let to get over these scruples, he must have the proper affidavits presented to him that the gun was safe, the dogs very cautious, the gunpowder the real Dartford, and the wind in the right quarter, before he could proceed to try the case.

In regard, however, to any new dress, he objected in toto; as he was convinced there was no habit whatever so cheap, so desirable, and so expeditious as—a Chancery suit.

These great Law Authorities, acting in conjunction with Sir Vicary Gibbs, may now be supposed to constitute a kind of sporting precedent, which will induce the remaining part of the Bench to take the field, and increase the game list immediately.

Mr. Justice Heath may probably confine himself to the Northern District after muir-game; and Mr. Baron Graham, being a great walker, may perhaps follow in the same line.

Mr. Justice Le Blanc and Mr. Justice Dampier have not intimated a wish to sport beyond a wheat ear, being very pleasant picking; and the Chief Justice in Banco Regis opines, "that having collected his ideas into a focus, and brought them into a point of concentration, he has no objection to 'hunting down the animal'—only he must do it coolly: the being cool being a material point with him."

And now, Sir, comes the most difficult part of all, viz. the inventing a dress, in which a Judge may pleasantly and conveniently take the field, and the Court immediately afterwards.

I propose, therefore, (diffident in the task I have undertaken), that his Lordship should have an airy cool hat, a light hanging scratch, by way of a wig, and a black everlasting jacket, empanelled with twelve buttons, with the appendage of a purple bag to hold the fruits of his sport and his notes; empowering, however, his Lordship's secretary to remove the said first-fruits before trial.

His Lordship, in the hurry of business, might pull out a partridge instead of a precedent, while the common people, in their usual familiar style, might be led to "make game," even of his law.

ANECDOTES, SCRAPS OF NATURAL HISTORY, &c.

SMOKING AT ACRE.

DR. Clarke states, that the tobacco of Acre "is very highly esteemed. The inhabitants make use of pipes garnished with a swathing of silk or linen, for the purpose of absorbing water. This being kept moist, cools the smoke, as it rises through the wooden tube, by the constant evaporation. It is a method of smoking less injurious than the Arab custom of using the Hooka, which generally consists of nothing more than a hollow gourd containing water, and two pieces of cane ; but the whole of the smoke, instead of being drawn into the mouth, is thereby inhaled upon the lungs, and sometimes this practice causes asthma, where it has been long continued.—Shaw, in his travels, mentions this custom of the Arabs. He says the Arabs call it Shrob el Douuhan, that is to say, “drinking of smoke.” It is a universal practice, not only in the Levant, but over all the Mediterranean. Like other intoxicating habits, when once acquired, it is not readily abandoned. The effect produced resembles that of a dram ; causing, at the moment, distention of the nerves and vessels of the head, particularly of the eyes. The Greek who travelled with us, after thus conveying all the smoke he could collect from a well-lighted pipe into his lungs, could retain it there for a few seconds, and sometimes drink a glass of water, before he rendered back the smoke, in curling volumes, through his lips and nostrils. The Mahometans are so delighted by the effect of inhaling smoke, that, when they have emptied their lungs of it, they exclaim, ‘ALHANDILLAH, God be praised !’

FRENCH VIVACITY.

Dr. C. in his voyage from Syria to Egypt, was on board a transport which conveyed home part of the French troops that surrendered at Alexandria, and whose vivacity he thus describes :

“ As soon as matters were a little adjusted, and the wounded men taken care of, among whom there were some in such terrible condition that they died upon the following day, a deputation from the prisoners waited upon the Captain, to offer him the use of a band of music every day during dinner, and requesting permission to exhibit a club d'armes, for fencing every morning, and a comédie every evening. Never was there any thing to equal the gaiety and good-humour of these Frenchmen. All animosity was laid aside ; singing, dancing, and acting, became the order of the day ; even the wounded, when able to come upon deck, shewed some signs of the joy which animated their comrades in the thoughts of returning to France. They would do any thing to gratify the English officers and men. Sometimes, when their band played ‘God save the King,’ the members of the theatrical party, in the forecastle, sang out, in broken English, ‘Send him victorious.’—The moment came, however, which was to create a pause in all this mirth. The Braakel got under weigh ; and a stiff gale causing more motion than suited either the club-d'armes or the comédie, every Frenchman was indisposed. Nothing then was heard but groans and curses. All the instruments were out of tune, and the deck was soon destitute of every other symptom of activity, except that which was manifested by the ship’s crew.”

EXHIBITION OF THE SERPENT-EATERS AT ROSETTA.

“ During our former visit to Rosetta, we neglected to notice the particular day of the year, on which a most singular exhibition of the Serpent-eaters, or Psylli, as mentioned by Herodotus, and by many antient authors, took place. A tumultuous throng, passing beneath the windows of our house, attracted our attention towards the quay : here we saw a concourse of people following men apparently frantic, frantic, who, with every appearance of convulsive agony, were brandishing live serpents, and then tearing them with their teeth; snatching them from each other's mouths, with loud cries and distorted features, and afterwards falling into the arms of the spectators, as if swooning; the women all the while rending the air with their lamentations. Pliny often mentions these jugglers; and as their tricks have been noticed by other travellers, it is only now necessary to attest the existence of this extraordinary remnant of a very antient custom.

BIRDS, &c. FOUND NEAR THE RIVER NILE.

" The birds which frequent the Nile, if we except the account given by Hasselquist, are but little known, and our observations will add nothing to this deficiency in ornithology. A most superb collection was, however, forwarded to England under the patronage and by the immediate orders of Lord Hutchinson. It had been formed, with consummate skill and labour, by a person of the name of Savigny. We principally noticed pelicans, from the mouth of the Nile, as far as Rachmanie. The Sterna Nilotica, or Egyptian sea-swallow, appeared, in immense flocks, near the sides of the river. Afterwards we saw many beautiful birds, of which we were entirely ignorant: particularly one of the plover kind, whose plumage exhibited the most lively and variegated colours. The pigeon-cones increased very much after passing Amrus, almost every village being furnished with them. The buffaloes, swimming about in the Nile, afford a singular sight, with their black muzzles sticking out of the water, and snorting as they cross from side to side; all the rest of their bodies being concealed. But the most remarkable animal appearance may be noticed by merely dipping a ladle or bucket into the midst of the torrent, which is everywhere dark with mud, and observing the swarms of animalculæ it contains. Among these, tadpoles and young frogs are so numerous, that, rapid as the current flows, there is no part of the Nile where the water does not contain them."

ARABIAN TUMBLERS.

" Parties of young Arabs continually accompanied our djerm (boat) this day, running along the banks of the river, and tumbling, to obtain a few parâs, as we see children in many parts of England; sometimes walking upon their hands, with their heels in the air; at others, whirling upon their hands and feet, to imitate the motion of a wheel. They swim and dive remarkably well; but these are arts in which all Oriental nations excel those of the Western world."

JUGGLERS AT CAIRO.

" We noticed several jugglers exhibiting their craft in the streets of Cairo; bearing in their hands a kind of toy, common in England, consisting of a number of pieces of wood, in the shape of playing cards, strung together, and revolving from top to bottom; such as are called by children trick-track, and are often painted to display the cries of London. These toys seemed to delight the Arabs, who considered them as put together by magic. For the rest of the exhibition, it much resembled the shows of our mountebanks; each party having its Merry Andrew, who endured hard kicks and cuffs for the amusement of the populace."

ANIMALS OF EGYPT.

" The inhabitants generally ride upon mules or asses: the latter are so active in this country, and possess such extraordinary strength, that for all purposes of labour, even for carrying heavy burthens across the sandy desert, they are next in utility to the camel, and will bear work better than horses. The horse in Egypt is used rather as an animal of parade, than for essential service. The vast army of the Wahabees in the desert were said to be mounted upon camels and upon asses."

FEMALES AT CAIRO.

" The females of Cairo are often seen in the public streets, riding upon asses and upon mules: they sit in the masculine attitude, like the women of Naples and other parts of Italy. Their dress consists of a hood and cloak, extending to the feet, with a stripe of white calico in front, concealing the face and breast, but having two small holes for the eyes. In this disguise, if any man should meet his own wife, or his sister, he would not be able to recognise her, unless she were to speak to him; and this is seldom done, because the suspicious Moslems, observing such an intercourse, might suppose an intrigue to be going on; in which case they would put one, if not both of them, to death."

PEDESTRIANISM.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

INCLOSED is a particular account of Knight's match against time, which has created much speculation in this part of the country.—Yours,

A CONSTANT READER,
Tewkesbury, Sept. 16, 1814.

ON Monday night, the 12th of September, at twelve o'clock, Knight, the Tewkesbury man, commenced the extraordinary feat of going one hundred miles in nineteen successive hours, for a wager of two hundred guineas. He started from the cottage at the Hythe, one mile from Tewkesbury, and went five miles to and fro on the Worcester turnpike-road.

During the first fifty miles, which he completed with apparent ease in the short period of eight hours and forty minutes, the most sanguine hopes were entertained by his friends that he would eventually accomplish the undertaking; but as the day advanced, the heat of the Sun became so intense, and so oppressive were the clouds of dust raised by the vast number of horsemen who continually followed him, and the immense concourse of persons who lined all parts of the road, that he very sensibly felt the powerful effects thereof early after he had accomplished the fiftieth mile, and it became evident, under these weighty disadvantages, that it would be impossible for him to complete the task. He nevertheless proceeded to the end of the sixtieth mile, when he very reluctantly yielded to the advice of his friends, and gave up the contest.

He accomplished the first ten miles in an hour and thirty-eight minutes; the second, in an hour and thirty-three minutes; the third, in an hour and thirty-nine minutes; after resting forty minutes, he performed the fourth ten miles in an hour and thirty minutes; the fifth, in an hour and forty minutes; he then then rested thirty-seven minutes, and did the sixth ten miles in two hours and four minutes, thus completing the sixty miles in eleven hours and twenty-one minutes.

Perhaps no man ever did the first fifty miles in so short a time, and with so much ease; and it is now considered doubtful whether he would not have been able to perform the one hundred miles within the allotted time, if he had been carefully trained, and the weather and the ground had not been so much against him.

Knight, by his failure, has lost a very considerable sum of money, for so confident was he of success, that he would not suffer any of his friends to be sharers in the stakes.

Another Pedestrian Feat.—On Wednesday night, the 14th instant, Mr. Samuel Dudfield, of Tewkesbury, for a considerable wager, walked from the turnpike at Tewkesbury, to the turnpike at Worcester, a distance of upwards of fourteen miles and a quarter, which he performed in two hours and thirty-five minutes, being five minutes within the time allowed.

ON THE COMPARATIVE SPEED OF RACE HORSES OF THE PRE- SENT AND FORMER DAYS.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,
YOUR pages of late have been more than usually occupied with the comparative speed of race-horses, which has much engrossed the attention of your numerous readers, and being a subject replete with amusement and practical utility, merits the consideration it has met with, particularly from those who value the celebrity we have acquired for superior speed, and the extraordinary exploits of those prodigies, Childers and Eclipse. Revolving on their astonishing performances, I was unwittingly led into closer comparison of the relative merits of the racers of the past and present day, and the result is, that in every point the palm is fairly awarded to the horses of former times. But, perhaps, a few examples will be more convincing, and suffice to set one part of this question entirely at rest. It is most generally admitted that Childers once ran over the Beacon Course, carrying 8st. 7lb. in seven minutes and thirty seconds. In an excellent portrait of Hambletonian beating Diamond over the same course, it is there asserted that the race was run in eight minutes and a half; and if this is true, nothing can more plainly evince the astonishing powers of Childers, particularly as he carried more weight, and had no antagonist of consequence to contend with, which was far from being the case with Hambletonian, who was compelled by a free use of the whip and spur to contest the race unto the very end, which was won with great difficulty by no more than half a length, and it was the general opinion, if Hambletonian had had above one hundred yards more to run, Diamond must have beat him; and yet he was allowed to be the fleetest horse that has appeared in this country for many years.

We have no mare upon record that has rivalled the various and astonishing performances of Bonny Black and Brocklesby Betty, for it is universally admitted, that in this respect the palm is clearly and fairly awarded to these celebrated mares.

mares.—Eleanor's performances at Epsom, great as they undoubtedly were, if followed up in that same gallant style must have completed this famous trio, of which, perhaps, the counterpart is not to be met with in the whole Racing Calender. But Eleanor's latter exploits did not fulfil those expectations which the Sporting World had predicted from a retrospect of this extraordinary feat.

We have no horse that evinces the high qualifications, both as racers and as stallions, like unto Match'em and Sir Peter Teazle; in fact no racer of the present, and I may add of former times, has equalled these celebrated sons of Old Cade and of Highflyer; their exploits are inferior but to few, and their produce, both for number and for goodness, will contest the prize with the most famous stallions of the past or present day.

King Herod was a famous runner, and esteemed the speediest horse of his day, for his exploits have deservedly ranked him with the *seven celebrated patriarchs, which, perhaps, taken for all in all, can admit of no parallel. But what crowns the fame of this justly celebrated racer, conjointly with his son Highflyer, and his grandson Sir Peter Teazle, is their well-known pedigree, which stands unrivalled, and remains superior to any racer upon the turf, either of ancient or of modern times.

Bay Malton was very speedy, and allowed to be the best horse of his time, but he often made the running so desperate as actually to beat himself; notwithstanding this he beat most of the capital horses of the day very easy, and will always stand foremost amongst the most celebrated racers of former times; his extraordinary performance at York is the first upon record, and admits of no parallel; in fact, we have but one authenticated instance where the same distance has been performed a few seconds less, within the same number of minutes and seconds.

What horse, in point of performances and successful running, will bear to be put in comparison with Gimcrack, who was the best give-and-take plate horse in the kingdom; he started seven times in 1764, and won every time with ease. Give-and-take plates were then all the vogue; as a diminutive racer he was allowed to be the fleetest and best bottomed this country ever produced.

Goldfinder was one of the best King's Plate horses, and actually won more than any racer in the kingdom. He was contemporary with Eclipse, and like him was uniformly successful, and carried all before him in the same gallant style: it was the opinion then prevalent, that his proprietor would have started him against Eclipse, although no doubt now remains that he must have been beat very easy, from a review of the astonishing powers of that famous racer, but that Fortune which presided over his reputation, would have it that he should fall lame, and by that means preserve the high character which he had acquired upon the turf.

What a fine idea is presented of the extraordinary speed of Eclipse, when Langold, one of the best horses in the kingdom, ran four miles at Doncaster, with 6st. in eight minutes and three seconds, and Eclipse performed the same distance, carrying 12st. in eight minutes, having no antagonists to contend with, or any inducement to speed; whereas Langold had nearly equal competitors, who contested the race unto the very end, which was won with difficulty, consequently he must exert his utmost powers to perform what Eclipse had done very easy in less time, although carrying double weight, and going only at his usual pace.

If we proceed a little nearer to our own times, we are still unable to point out any horse which has performed the single mile within the same time as Firetail and Pumpkin; Shark and Fireaway were very speedy, and beat the best horses of the day a single mile, but I never heard that either performed this distance in so short a time. Young Eclipse was likewise an excellent runner, and outstripped most of the speediest racers of his time, but he was some seconds more than Firetail and Pumpkin in running the single mile; if we recede still farther back, we are then equally at a loss to produce the racer who has emulated this extraordinary exploit; not even Dungannon, Rockingham, Buzzard, Hambletonian, Eagle, or even Smoleusko, though true and successful runners, have rivalled this astonishing effort of fleetness. Great as this exertion unquestionably is, it was attended with a total inability for continuance; in fact, Nature must be totally exhausted after so surprising a performance, and the powers of motion must require resuscitation with more than ordinary vigour. Rockingham and Delpini were avowedly the fleetest racers that had appeared in this country since Shark and Highflyer; they beat nearly every horse that could be brought against them at every distance, clearly proving their superiority whether they ran for speed or bottom; like most horses that start often, they were sometimes beat, but I can safely affirm, never by middling racers. Rockingham was beat by Dungannon, who, although an inferior runner, was superior to most racers of his year, and indeed great puffing has been made on this great exploit, which gives Dungannon the appearance of having more speed than he actually possessed. Phenomenon, however, at even weights, beat him very easy. If Rockingham had performed nothing else, the last match he ever run, like his predecessor Eclipse, must entitle him to a high character upon the turf; after which, having no horse to start against him, he was taken out of training, but his produce holds no distinguished celebrity on the turf; for they are few, very few indeed, who have combined the requisites both as famous racers who have carried all before them similar to Eclipse, and equally as famous stallions; Delpini, it is true, was beat oftener than Rockingham, but never, however, by an indifferent runner, for he was one of the very few that could be depended upon when he started, and was generally certain of winning; his produce is held in great esteem, very superior to his antagonist, but neither of them will ever acquire a great reputation merely as stallions. Coriander was a famous runner, and, conjointly with his celebrated antagonist Buzzard, beat all the best horses of their day, at every length, either in speed or stoutness. Their performances stand unrivalled, and have rendered them of great celebrity upon the turf, particularly as they beat most of their opponents at a time when we usually imagine the race-horse begins to train off, and the powers of action become debilitated from frequent severe running; these extraordinary racers are amongst the very few who stood so many years' racing, and whose exploits during that time have seldom been equalled, and which has procured them high fame in the sporting annals.

As we approach still nearer within the recollection of the sportsman of the present day, and refer back to the pages of the Sporting Magazine, it will be seen that the race-horse some few years back, performed the four miles at Doncaster considerably in less time than those of the present day. In 1801, Sir Solomon, with 8st. 7lb. ran four miles at Doncaster in seven minutes and ten seconds. Octavian, in 1812, ran the same distance at Doncaster, carrying 8st. 5lb. in eight minutes and three seconds, both five years old. Sir Solomon, taken for all in all, was at best but a middling racer, and was beat nearly as often as he won. Octavian won the St. Leger and several other stakes, and was esteemed the fleetest horse of the day in the kingdom. Both had nearly equal antagonists to contend with, and, of the two, I really think that Sir Solomon had the easiest. Alonzo, in 1802, with 7st. 7lb. ran four miles at Doncaster in seven minutes and eight seconds. In 1812, Slender Billy, carrying 7st. 7lb. ran over the same course in seven minutes and fifty-eight seconds. In 1813, Viscount, same weight, ran the four miles at Doncaster in seven minutes and forty-five seconds, all 4 years old. Alonzo was allowed to be but an indifferent racer, and was very frequently beat. Slender Billy beat nearly all the best horses in the North, and was esteemed superior to most 4-year olds in the kingdom. Viscount was a good, but a very uncertain runner; nevertheless he likewise beat most of the capital racers in the kingdom; but this present year, from some strange cause, he has totally lost his superior excellence of racing, and has been beat by very middling horses, which, the preceding year, stood but little chance with him.

These instances are convincing as the coincidence is just, and perhaps seldom or never met with before in the Racing Calendar, and as such they must carry conviction to every impartial observer, and with him in whose judgment a repetition of facts is paramount to every other consideration. In every point of view which I have placed this comparison, it ultimately appears in favour of the race-horse of former times; and if the precise qualification of each racer is distinctly pointed out, and their equals of modern times produced, the conclusion will be found to be impartially correct.

Childers for speed; Bonny Black, Brocklesby Betty, and Bay Malton, for performances; Eclipse for stoutness; Match'em, Herod, Highflyer, and Sir Peter Teazle, for combining the requisites both as racers and as stallions; Marc Antony and Shark for their numerous and various exploits; Regulus and Goldfinder for uniform success; and Firetail and Pumpkin for their wonderful performance of fleetness, have, like an irresistible torrent, carried all before them, and so effectually, that the work of ages will scarcely suffice to produce the parallel, who in this respect will wrest the palm of superiority from them, and bear it away with the envious distinction "thick upon him." To me the day appears far distant when the Sporting World will again see the race-horse endowed with such wonderful powers of progression, and who will ever contest the prize with these aforementioned patriarchs. Be this as it may, the farther I am led into the comparative merits of the race-horses of the present and former times, the more I am convinced we shall be found to be deficient, and even unable to produce one racer who can stand a comparison with either of these celebrated horses.—I am, Sir, your obedient servant, Z.B.

P. S. Since writing the above I have seen it asserted in one of our diurnal publications, that Belville, the great favourite for the St. Leger, was "considered from public running and private report the best horse of his year in the kingdom." Now, from a variety of causes, I much suspect the truth of this assertion, as Belville never beat but one horse worthy the name of a good runner; and that he was likewise in his turn beat easily by Cannon Ball. Perhaps this writer never reflected that there existed such horses as Blucher, Olive, Petuaria, Haphazard colt, Alfana, Bourbon, &c. which are in no respect inferior to this so belauded favourite.

LOCKED JAW IN THE HORSE.

To the Editor of the Sporting Magazine.

SIR,

DURING the course of several years residence in India as a Cavalry Officer, I have repeatedly witnessed the cure of locked jaw in horses, by the very summary process of immersion in cold water, a case of which I transmit for insertion in your entertaining publication, leaving the faculty to make what remarks, or improvements upon the fact, that they please.

A horse, the property of an officer in the — Light Dragoons, when that regiment lay in the vicinity of Seringapatam, received a severe hurt, while on march, that lacerated dreadfully what anatomists term the perforatus tendon, and which his owner, who himself believed that he possessed more skill than any ten veterinary surgeons, having undertaken to cure, a locked jaw, as might have been expected, was the result. The horse, at the time of the accident, was in high health and spirits, full of fire and action, and in that country, at that period, worth five hundred pounds. Though I had previously witnessed cases of universal convulsion, the rigour attending this was more violent than in any previous instance: in parts peculiarly tendinal, it drew the very skin itself into knots. The four legs stood in a straddling position, and as stiff as stakes; the nose was elevated into a direct line with the neck; the eyes fixed; and, but for the pulsations of the heart and arteries, you might have taken the animal for a petrifaction: by the mouth it was impossible to pass either food or physic, and even the anus, together with the intestine directly in contact with it, was so intensely contracted, as to render the operation of clysters, however carefully administered, extremely dubious.

In many parts of India, as is well known to most officers who have served there, are scattered deep, and sometimes extensive pools, or, to speak figuratively, gulphs of water; indeed some of them, in particular places, are deep enough to justify the expression, and also are often, two thirds of their circumference, bounded by precipices of a considerable height.

It was not till the case was considered utterly hopeless that this amateur Esculapius of horse doctors, who thought himself at that time a very Xenophon in the management of cavalry, and had found out so wonderful a plan of shoeing as to lame every animal he touched, would listen to the voice of science when issuing from the lungs of a veterinary surgeon: however, he did at last consult one, who, to his mortification, condemned his boasted mode of treatment in toto, and pronounced his horse all but dead; advising, however, as a last resource, to try the effects of immersion in water. To the summit of one of these precipices, that, with the exception of one small outlet, over hung a piece of water, which, though not more than twenty yards in diameter, appeared bottomless, the animal, in the deplorable state above described, was carried by some of the men, who, having fastened on him a round halter, with a rope sufficiently long to reach the outlet affixed to it, precipitated him headlong into the water; this experiment was tried before all the officers of the regiment; including Capt. ——, who, ere the lapse of one minute, had to be gratified by its complete success, for the concussion produced by the first plunge, shook the system to a degree that set the muscles instantaneously at liberty, and, though feebly under the guidance of those who held the rope, the rescued creature was able to reach the shore. The lacerated tendon was soon healed, and the accident that bade fair to end fatally, and so much to the detriment of Capt. ——, was productive of no other loss to him than his propensity to be a farrier.

I have stated this, because experience has long taught me the injury done to the service by the interference of gentlemen with a science, which certainly a man who has been regularly bred to it, to say the least, stands a chance of knowing much better than themselves.

The above is but one, as heretofore observed, of many cases, where I have witnessed the cure of this death-dealing spasm by immersion in water. I would, nevertheless, ask the favour to make a few observations:—If the animal be young, full-chested, possessing that expansion of form, which, while it confers strength and beauty, leaves ample room for the heart, the lungs, and the abdominal viscera to perform their tasks, I durst venture to bet any odds that no case of locked jaw in the horse, arising from lacerated tendon, could resist the operation of the cold bath—would it not, therefore, thus promising, always be desirable to try it? If near the sea, how easily might this be accomplished; and if not in countries where there is a sufficiency of water, conveniences I certainly think might easily be made, which, to save the life of a valuable horse, one would endeavour to procure, although at some expence. I would here, with due acknowledgments, submit to the faculty whether it might not be advisable to try the effects of immersion in cold water on the human subject in similarly desperate cases of locked jaw?

I have been told that the learned Professor of the Veterinary College recommends the application of cold water to the head and other parts of the patient most rigorously affected, in the way of a shower bath. The idea is certainly good, though I never saw less than total immersion attended with success.

Locked jaw has been considered by farriers always as a formidable, and generally an unconquerable disease; and I wish to state, that when the subject is old, has been long in hard work, or when the spasm has its origin in bots, or any other internal marked affection or deficiency, immersion in cold water might have a dubious, if not fatal effect. The diseased or debilitated viscera might be unable to sustain the concussion, and instant death ensue. Here the cause must be removed, and to be enabled to give an opinion as to the manner of removing it, I have consulted several authors, but with little benefit, almost all of them differing from each other in their prescriptions. White, of Exeter, recommends camphor, opium, and many other stimulating things; Gibson and Suape, each a variety of nostrums, fashionable no doubt in their day, though but few of them now retain their places in the materia medica; and Powis, the Veterinary Surgeon, whose little book* called the Groom's Guide; or, Stable Directory, I have lately read, and whose authority to me appears worth all the rest, relates a case where he cured one of these desperate convulsions completely, by the application of mercurial ointment to the inside of each thigh, till incipient salivation was produced. I quote this author, because his practice coincides with that of several veterinary practitioners, whom I have known abroad, who from long experience are become eminent in the profession, and who, in warm climates, where from various causes, this disease is often prevalent, have so applied mercury, and many times with the like success.

Hoping this may be worthy a place in your Magazine, that it may excite some notice from medical professors, and thereby elicit enquiries tending to benefit mankind—I remain, Sir, your's, very respectfully,

AN OLD SOLDIER.

ACCOUNT OF GAME, &c. ON THE MISSOURI RIVER.

SINCE the source of the Missouri River has been recently explored by the American Captains, Lewis and Clarke, the game, particularly the bears of this distant quarter, have been found to be more formidable than those of any other part of the world. We will begin with an account of the white bear, though he is by no means so much dreaded as the brown one: —“ Captain Lewis being on shore

* I have in my possession two books written by this author, (who seems to be a plain sensible practitioner) both of which are all they pretend to be, that is, useful, but why he should be so eager to repeat the self-evident fact that no shoe or system of shoeing can apply to all kinds of feet is wonderful; he repeats this twenty times at least, as if every body were not acquainted with the truism —Really Mr. Powis

“ There needs no Ghost to rise to tell us this.”

with

with one Indian hunter, met about eight o'clock two white bears (of the strength and ferocity of this animal, the Indians gave dreadful accounts); they never attack him but in parties of six or eight persons, and even then are often defeated with the loss of one or more of their number, for having no weapons but bows and arrows, and the bad guns with which traders supply them, they are obliged to approach very near the bear, and as no wound except through the head or heart is mortal, they frequently fall a sacrifice if they miss their aim. He rather attacks than avoids a man, and such is the terror which he has inspired, that the Indians who go in quest of him, paint themselves, and perform all the superstitious rites customary when they make war on a neighbouring nation. Hitherto, those we had seen did not appear desirous of encountering us; but although to a skilful rifleman the danger is very much diminished, yet the white bear is still a terrible animal. On approaching these two, Captain Lewis and the hunter fired, and each wounded a bear; one of them made his escape; the other turned upon Capt. Lewis and pursued him seventy or eighty yards, but being badly wounded, he could not run so fast as to prevent him from re-loading his piece, which he again aimed at him, and a third shot brought him to the ground. He was a male not quite full grown, and weighed about three hundred pounds. The legs are somewhat longer than those of the black bear, the talons and tusks much larger and stronger. The testicles are also placed much farther forward, and suspended in separate pouches, while those of the black bear are in a single pouch like a dog.

Brown Bears.—About five in the afternoon, one of our men, who had been ill and was suffered to walk on shore, came running to the boats with every symptom of terror and distress; for some time after we had taken him on board, he was so much out of breath as to be unable to describe what he had seen. He at length told us that about a mile and a half below he had shot a brown bear, which immediately turned and was in close pursuit of him. Captain Lewis, with seven men, immediately went in search of him, and having discovered his track, followed and found him concealed in some thick brushwood, and shot him with two balls through the skull. Though somewhat smaller than that killed a few days ago, he was a monstrous animal. Our man had shot him through the lungs, yet he had pursued him furiously for half a mile, then returned more than twice that distance, and with his talons had prepared himself a bed in the earth two feet deep and five feet long, and was perfectly alive when they found him, at least two hours after he had received the first wound. There is no chance of killing these brown bears by a single shot, unless the ball goes through the brains, and this is very difficult on account of two large muscles which cover the side of the forehead, and the sharp projection of the centre of the frontal bone, which is also thick.

Towards the evening the men in the hindmost canoes discovered a large brown bear lying in the open grounds about three hundred paces from the river; six of them, all good hunters, immediately went to attack him, and concealing them-selves selves by a small eminence, they came unperceived within forty paces of him ; four of the hunters now fired, and each lodged a ball in his body, two of them directly through the lungs ; the furious animal sprang up and ran open-mouthed upon them ; as he came near, the two hunters who had reserved their fire, gave him two wounds, one of which breaking his shoulder retarded his motion for a moment, but before they could reload, he was so near that they were obliged to run to the river, and before they reached it, he had almost overtaken them ; two jumped into a canoe, the other four separated, and concealing themselves in the willows, fired as fast as each could re-load. They struck him several times, but instead of weakening the monster, each shot seemed only to direct him towards the hunter, till at last he pushed two of them so closely, that they threw aside their guns and pouches and jumped down a perpendicular bank of twenty feet into the river. The bear sprung after them, and was within a few feet of the hind-most, when one of the hunters on shore shot him through the head, and finally killed him ; they dragged him to the shore, and found that eight balls had passed through him in different directions.

A Black Bear.—One of these, the largest we had seen, being fired at, fled with a most tremendous roar, and such was his extraordinary tenacity of life, that although he had five balls passed through his lungs, he swam more than half across the river to a sand bar, and survived twenty minutes. He weighed between five and six hundred pounds at least, and measured eight feet seven inches and a half from the nose to the extremity of the hind feet ; five feet ten inches and a half round the breast ; three feet eleven inches round the neck : one foot eleven inches round the middle of the fore leg, and his talons, five on each foot, were four inches and three-eighths in length.

Antelopes.—The antelopes here are lean. This fleet and quick-sighted animal is generally the victim of its curiosity ; for when they first see the hunters they run with great velocity ; if he lies down on the ground, and lifts up his arm, his hat, or his foot, the antelope returns on a light trot to look at the object, and sometimes comes and goes two or three times till it gets within reach of the rifle. So sometimes they leave their own herd to go and look at the wolves, who crouch down, and if the antelope be frightened at first, they repeat the same manœuvre, and sometimes relieve each other till they get it completely from the rest, when they seize it. But generally the wolves seize the antelopes while they are crossing the rivers ; for though swift of foot they are very bad swimmers.

Wolves.—These are very abundant, and are of two species. First, the small wolf or burrowing dog of the meadows, of an intermediate size between the fox and the dog, very delicately formed, fleet and active. The ears are large, erect, and pointed, like that of the fox ; the tail long and bushy ; the hair and fur of a pale reddish brown colour, though much coarser than that of the fox ; the eye of a deep sea-green colour, small and piercing ; the talons rather longer than those of the wolf of the Atlantic states, which animal seems not to be found on this side the river Plate. These wolves generally associate in bands of ten or twelve, and are rarely if ever seen alone, not being able singly to attack a deer or antelope. They live and rear their young in burrows, which they fix near some pass or spot much frequented by game, and sally out in a body against any animal they think they can overpower; but on the slightest alarm, retreat to their burrows, making a noise exactly like a small dog.

A new species of Goose.—Among the vast quantities of game on the Missouri, there is a small species of goose differing considerably from the common Canadian goose, its neck, head, and beak, being much thicker, larger, and shorter in proportion to its size, the noise, too, resembling more that of the brant, or of a young goose that has not yet fully acquired its note. This species also associates in flocks with the large geese. The body and wings are of a beautiful pure white, except the black feathers of the first and second joints of the wings; the beak and legs are of a reddish or flesh-coloured white; the eye of a moderate size; the pupil of a deep sea-green encircled with a ring of yellowish brown. The tail consists of sixteen feathers equally long. The flesh is dark, and as well as its note differs but little from those of the common brant, whom in form and habit it resembles, and with whom it sometimes unites in a common flock. The white brants also associate by themselves in large flocks, but as they did not appear to be mated or paired off, it was doubtful whether they were or were not birds of passage.

Dance of the Teton Indians.—“Every thing,” says the relator, “being cleared away for the dance, a large fire being made in the centre of the house, giving at once both light and warmth to our ball room, the amusement soon commenced. The orchestra was composed of about ten men, who played on a sort of tambourin formed of skin stretched across a hoop, and which made a jingling noise by the application of a long stick, to which the hoofs of deer and goats were hung. The next instrument was a small skin bag, with pebbles in it: these, with five or six young men for the vocal part, made up the band. The women then came forward, highly decorated, some with poles in their hands, on which were hung the scalps of their enemies; others with guns, spears, or different trophies, taken in war by their husbands, brothers, or connexions. Having arranged themselves in two columns, one on each side of the fire, as soon as the music began, they danced towards each other till they met in the centre, when the rattles were shaken, then they all shouted and returned back to their places. They have no step, but shuffle along the ground; nor does the music appear to be any thing more than a confusion of noises, distinguished only by hard or gentle blows upon the buffalo skin. The song is perfectly extemporaneous. In the pauses of the dance any man of the company comes forward and recites, in a sort of low guttural tone, some little story or incident, which is either martial or ludicrous, or, as was the case this evening, voluptuous and indecent. This is taken up by the orchestra first performing, and when it ceases, the women raise their voices and make a music more agreeable, that is, less intolerable, than that of the musicians. The dances of the men, which are always separate from the women, are conducted very nearly in the same way, except that the men jump up and down instead of shuffling, and in the war dances the recitations are all of a military cast. The harmony of this entertainment, however, had nearly been disturbed by one of the musicians, who, thinking he had not received a due share of the tobacco distributed during the evening, put himself into a passion, broke one of the drums, threw two of them into the fire, and then left the band. The drums were taken out, and a buffaloe robe, held in one hand and beaten by the other by several of the company, supplied the place of the lost drum or tambourin; and no notice whatever was taken of the offensive conduct of the man. This meeting broke up about twelve at night, when the whole party separated in perfect good humour.

Gaming.—The natural propensity of these people is also an attachment to games of hazard, which they follow with a ruinous avidity. The games are of two kinds: In the first, one of the company assumes the office of banker, and plays against the rest. He takes a small stone, about the size of a bean, which he shifts from the other with great dexterity, repeating at the same time a song adapted to the game, and which serves to divert the company till, having agreed on the stake, he holds out his hands, and the antagonist wins or loses, as he succeeds or fails at guessing in which hand the stone is. After the banker has lost his money, or whenever he is tired, the stone is transferred to another, who in turn challenges the rest of the company. The other game is something like the game of nine pins; two pins are placed on the floor, about the distance of a foot from each other, and a small hole made behind them. The players then go about ten feet from the hole, into which they try to roll a small piece, resembling the men used at draughts: if they succeed in putting it into the hole, they win the stake; if the piece rolls between the pins, but does not go into the hole, nothing is won or lost; but the wager is wholly lost, if the chequer rolls outside of the pins. Entire days are wasted at these games, which are often continued through the night round the blaze of their fires, till the last article of clothing, or even the last blue bead, is won from the desperate adventurer.

RE-OPENING OF DRURY-LANE THEATRE.

THIS beautiful edifice was opened for the season, on Tuesday, the 20th instant. As the interior of that part appropriated to the audience is entirely new, we deem the following description of the alterations not inappropriately transcribed into our pages:—

When this Theatre opened two seasons ago, it was fully foreseen that the embellishments of the interior would not be permanent upon the green walls; the moisture exhaling from the bricks and plaster would certainly occasion a fading in the colours, and a tarnish in the gilding. This proved to be the case, and as the expence of repainting and re-gilding would be nearly equal to that of a new interior, it was determined to give a new interior, for in a Theatre novelty has an undisputed sway.

The grand saloon is painted with a lilac ground, harmonizing with the columns of pilasters; the great stair-case and rotunda are fresh painted and decorated; the coridores of the boxes are divided into pannels of two shades of delicate green, with a white Etruscan border: these lead us into the interior, the basement is painted in rich Scagliola marble. The fronts of the dress boxes are a light blue ground, enriched by gold octagonal lattice work, with roses in the centres, and a relief of white in the intersections.

The canopy fronts of the first tier have an antique projecting scroll, with gold foliage falling upon relieved flutings. The second tier is embellished by a series of classical subjects, painted in relief upon a blue ground, with enriched borders.

The third tier of boxes is decorated by a gold scroll-work in relief, running from the centre ornament of the same character, to each termination of the sides, upon a blue ground.

The prevailing colour, therefore, of the boxes is blue; but it is relieved, and a warmth of tone produced, by the back of the boxes being painted in a light brown colour, divided into pannels by appropriate borderings.

The ceiling is new, the dome being divided into alternate compartments of blue vanishing into distance, and scroll enrichments terminating in the centre.

Increased accommodation has also been contrived for the galleries.

It now only remains to describe the alterations made in the proscenium. The hydrostatic lamps placed upon tripods on each side of the proscenium, though very beautiful and brilliant in their appearance, were found, on practice, too delicate in their construction to bear the currents of air to which they were exposed, by the rising and falling of the curtain; they were therefore removed at the close of the first season, and their supports, the tripods, remained as elegant, but useless ornaments; they are now displaced, and the vacancy filled up by two additional proscenium boxes on each side.

The two grand columns, in compliance with the taste and desire of theatrical criticism, have been removed, and the angles left have been filled up by ornaments uniting with the general contour of the house, and affording to the architect the opportunity of indulging the performers in their favourite wish of stage doors. Above these doors, balconies, with suitable canopies, lattice-work, and galleries are placed, rendering them both ornamental in the general effect and serviceable in the business of the stage.

The grand arch of the proscenium has been contrived to unite with this oblique support.

The proscenium boxes are fronted by relief enrichments of classical subjects, and the colours blue, white, and gold, corresponding with the body of the house; the whole is in perfect harmony.

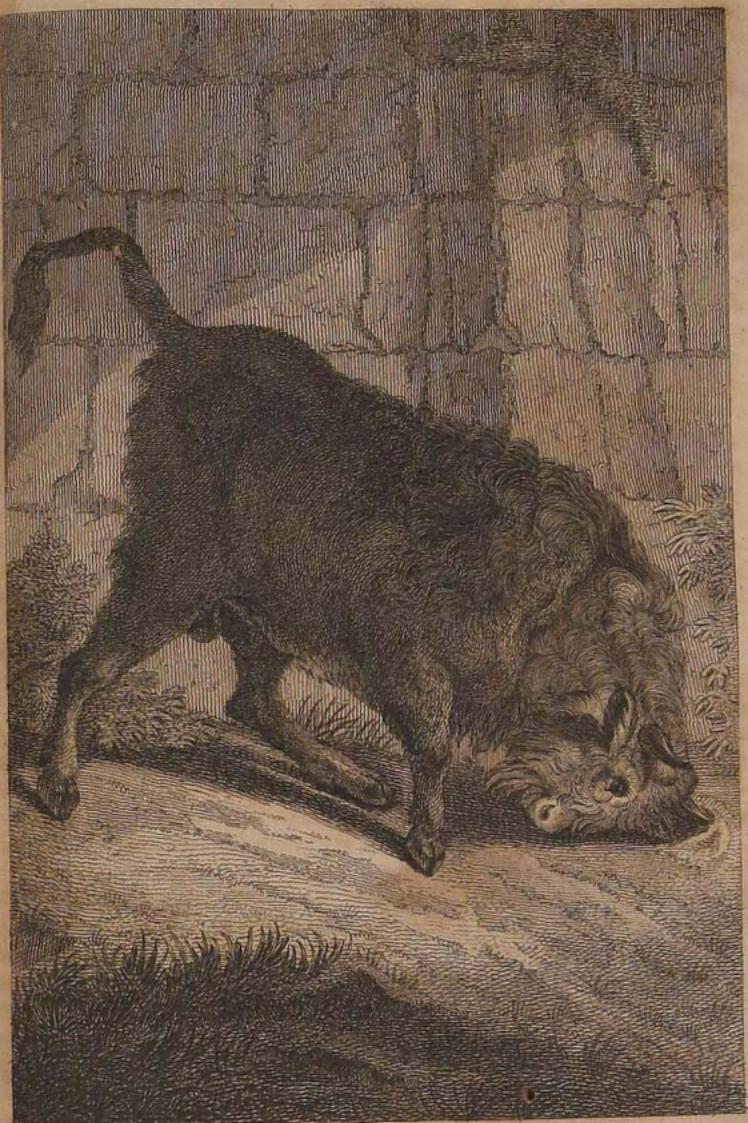

It only remains to add to this account, that the Theatre is altogether beautiful in the extreme, and that the alterations have met the undivided approbation of very crowded houses.—(For the Address spoken on opening of the Theatre, see our Poetic Department.)

FEAST OF WIT.

A Dr. Gamble lately humbugged the citizens of Exeter, by advertising, that a balloon was to go off from the Castle. He got subscriptions and admissions to a considerable amount; but the thing totally failed, and the ascending of the Doctor's balloon never took place, to the no small disappointment of immense crowds. The Doctor was roughly handled, the money (that is, all they found about him, for the wife had moved off with the greater part) was forcibly taken from him, and given to the poor. The next day, handbills, entitled the Wonder of Wonders, were distributed through the city by some wags, notifying that the Doctor would exhibit a variety of pleasing experiments illustrative of the sciences, among which, by means of curiously contrived slippers, he was to "walk across the river Exe." A reel was also to be danced in the middle of the river, and many other equally possible feats were to be performed.—The concourse of wiseacres that were gathered together to see the wonder of wonders, was truly astonishing; but, as some very wise and learned old woman has observed, "the farther you travel to the west, the more you will be convinced the wise men come from the east."

A FRENCH Lady, distinguished by her wit and levity, said, the other day, to a gallant, who complained of her rigour and indifference—"My good friend, I could love you; but, in truth, I have not time. I am engaged."

THE late Lord ——, who hated his wife (Elizabeth), on her being taken suddenly ill, laid a wager she would die, which event taking place, one of his friends observed, that his Lordship had won by the loss of his Bet.

ON one of the roads leading to the French capital, an innkeeper has laid a trap for some of our English gulls in the form of the following invitation over the door:—"This be one house that take the English in."—The Frenchman spoke the truth.

French Caricatures.—Among the new caricatures with which Paris abounds, is one entitled, "The English in Burgundy."—It represents a public-house, on which we read, "Drinking here at twelve francs per hour."—An Englishman, whose mouth is closely glued to the cock of a cask, receives with delight the divine juice. The hand of the clock marks four o'clock; the master of the house, who, tired out with watching, is asleep upon the cask near the intrepid toper, holds in his hand a paper, which states that the sitting commenced at twelve o'clock,

A GENTLEMAN, celebrated for his bon mots and puns, having seen an officer of remarkable corpulence at a late great assembly, and being told he belonged to the Waggoners' Corps, replied, "I really thought so, for he is in himself Magna Charta."

THE following is the only bon mot ever recorded of Bonaparte: It may be truly considered what the French call a platitude:—In one of his Italian campaigns, and not very long after his marriage with Josephine, he was met by a deputation from a town which he was on the point of entering. The municipal orator, after eulogising most profusely the martial and republican glory of "Le Citoyen General," was gallantly extending his compliments to "La Citoyenne Generale," when Bonaparte hastily interrupted him by saying, "Stop, stop, my friend; you are under a mistake; my wife does not even hold the rank of corporal in my army."

IMPROMPTU,

On reading an attack upon the flattery and deceit of Men, which was written by a Lady.

Men could not by their flattery
So readily deceive,
If women, from their vanity,
Did not so soon believe.

A NEAR-SIGHTED gentleman at a race-ball observing the split produced by the forced compression of a lady's shoulders behind, exclaimed, "'Pon honour, that is quite a new feature—I never saw it before."

A Specimen of the Marvellous.—Mr. Fenwick, in his General History of Connecticut, says, "I am bold to assert that I have followed the line of truth freely, and unbiassed by partiality or prejudice;" of which the following tale will afford our readers convincing evidence:—Speaking of the town of Windham, he says—"One night in July, 1758, the frogs of an artificial pool, three miles square, and about five from Windham, finding the water dried up, left the place in a body, and marched, or rather hopped, towards Winnomanic river. They were under the necessity of taking the road, and going through the town, which they entered about midnight. The bull-frogs were the leaders, and the pipers followed without number. They filled a road forty yards wide, for four miles in length, and were for several hours passing through the town, unusually clamorous.—The inhabitants were equally perplexed and frightened: some expected to find an army of French and Indians: others feared an earthquake, and dissolution of nature. The consternation was universal. Old and young, male and female, fled naked from their beds, with worse shriekings than those of the frogs. The event was fatal to several women. The men, after a flight of half a mile, in which they met with many a broken shin, finding no enemies in pursuit of them, made a halt, and summoned resolution enough to venture back to their wives and children; when they distinctly heard from the enemy's camp these words, Wight, Helderken, Dier tete. This last they thought meant treaty; and plucking up courage, they sent a triumvirate to capitulate with the supposed French and Indians.—These three men soon approached in their shirts, and begged to speak with the General; but it being dark, and no answer given, they were solely agitated for some time betwixt hope and fear; at length, however, they discovered that the dreaded inimical enemy was an army of thirsty frogs, going to the river for a little water."

BURDEROP Races, Wiltshire, although established within these few years, are in as high repute as any in the kingdom. The course is formed on the Downs, on the side of a hill, the sole demesne of Mr. Calley, the spirited Member for Cricklade. They commenced on Tuesday, the 6th instant, and the sport upon the whole was very good. Mr. Codrington, of New House, is appointed Steward for the next year.

LORD Middleton has removed his kennel to Stratford-upon-Avon. He is supposed now to have one of the finest packs of fox-hounds in England, with a stud of nearly forty hunters in the highest condition.

HIS Grace the Duke of Rutland, the Duchess Dowager of Rutland, and Lord Charles Manners were present at the Leicester Meeting, as well as a large assemblage of beauty and fashion. The public ordinaries at the Three Crowns were abundant in every delicacy in season, and the assemblies numerously and splendidly attended.

The Duke of Rutland honours the next meeting as Steward.

SPORTSMEN in general complain of the great scarcity of birds, owing, it is conjectured, to the severity of the last winter. This is the more probable cause, as so few old birds are found. Many gentlemen have resolved not, to destroy any upon their estates this season.

COLONEL Thornton, with three carriages, ten horses, two packs of hounds, with his falconer and hawks, embarked for France on Friday Sept. 2, at Southampton. A French Nobleman, late an emigrant in this country, to whom the Colonel had shewn kindness in the hour of adversity, has offered him a house furnished, with servants, the produce of an estate in France, &c. all free of expence.

Fifteen English gentlemen have established a subscription hunt at Rouen, and have purchased a pack of excellent harriers. Their uniform is scarlet jackets, gilt buttons, and black velvet collars, caps, white waistcoats, and leather breeches. Hares and partridges are in great abundance; large parties of our sporting countrymen daily go out with their pointers and dog-carts, and return loaded with game.

The French Government appear desirous of encouraging horse racing; prizes have been given to be run for, and several of the Royal Family lately attended some races near Paris.

POSTING.—It is the universal custom now in France to make the oats, which are ground, into a loaf, which which they cut or break into small pieces, and throwing water upon it in a trough, the horse eats and digests it much more readily than when given to him in the natural state of oats.

FROM the Portsmouth Newspaper called the Hampshire Courier :—“ Colonel Thornton, in his memoirs says, that when hunting in France with many of the leading characters of that nation, during the peace of Amiens, he could not help feeling a patriotic glow at the superiority of the English hounds over the French.—The same may be said of our game cocks, and it is proved almost daily before our eyes. One of these birds, the property of a person in the neighbourhood, is incessantly watching on the parade, to come in contact with those which the French people bring over by dozens. Whenever he does happen to catch one at a little distance from the coops, he attacks him, and never fails in a few minutes to put him to flight, though it frequently happens that his opponent is as much again in weight. These national quarrels afford much amusement to the spectators, and the victor, by his strutting, appears conscious of the encouragement he receives.”

FOUR tame stags used to draw the state carriage of Jerome Bonaparte, late King of Westphalia ; they have been presented to the Crown Prince of Sweden.

PONTEFRACT exhibited during the race week one continued scene of gaiety and festivity. Mr. Sadler, jun. ascended with his grand balloon on the Thursday, accompanied by Miss Thompson. The aeronauts took a direction due north for about ten minutes, and afterwards moved north-east for about half an hour, when they gradually descended near Pontefract in the evening. The senior Mr. Sadler considered the ascension equal in grandeur to any he had ever witnessed.

A mezzotinto print has lately been published of Mr. Cooper's celebrated painting, Tam o'Shanter. Meyer is the engraver, and its fidelity of delineation will, no doubt, procure it a considerable sale. The print is dedicated to the Earl of Upper Ossory, the present possessor of the painting.

A RACE, which excited much sporting interest, took place on Tuesday, the 29th ult. over the Blackwater trotting ground, Hants, betwixt Captain Hansom's grey gelding Jeffery and a bay horse, the charger of an officer of the 14th dragoons. The distance to gallop was twelve miles. The gelding made play at speed, and both horses run the whole of the ground as follows, as nearly as could be ascertained by the umpire :—

	M.	S.
First mile.....	2	10
Second.....	2	8
Third	2	4
Fourth	2	4
Fifth	2	6
Sixth	2	2
Seventh	2	4
Eighth.....	2	4
Ninth	2	4
Tenth	2	6
Eleventh	2	9
Twelfth	2	10

25 11
The race was for 100gs, and it was

was uncommonly well contested to the end, and nicely won by the bay horse.

A LONG depending match betwixt Mr. J. Barker's brown horse, Trule, and Mr. R. Walker's bl. h. Platoff, was decided on Wednesdays the 21st instant, upon the Oldham road, Lancashire : the match was for 50l. and dinner and wine for twelve friends ; each horse was to bring three tons, cart and coals together, six miles direct ; it was won by Mr. Walker's black horse, who performed the distance with apparent ease, in an hour and 27 minutes ; Mr. Barker's was one hour and 31 minutes.

ON Thursday, the 1st instant, a main of cocks was fought at Davis's pit, Uxbridge-road, between Middlesex and Sussex, for 20 guineas a battle and 50 the main. Feeders, Rolfe and Johnson. Nine battles were fought, and Sussex won the main by the odd battle.

AT the Suffield cocking, which succeeded Warwick races, eleven battles were fought between Staffordshire and Derbyshire, which was decided by the odd battle in favour of Derby.

A BET of fifty guineas was decided on Tuesday the 6th instant, at a tavern in the City, between two gentlemen : one was to drink wine, and the other water, glass for glass, and he that gave in was to be the loser. They drank the contents of a bottle and a half each, but the wine drinker was triumphant. Poor water-drinker was taken suddenly ill, and has been since confined with a fit of the gout.

PEDESTRIANISM.—Tuesday the 13th instant, J. Sims, hatmaker, between 50 and 60 years old, undertook to walk, for a wager of 5l. from London-bridge to Crayford, in Kent, and back again (28 miles), in four hours.—He started at six o'clock, rested at Blackheath five minutes, and reached Crayford at 56 minutes before eight ; and after stopping 10 minutes, started afresh, and returned to the starting post 12 minutes before 1o o'clock, making three hours and 48 minutes.

Monday the 29th ult. Captain Barclay, of the 42d regiment, brother to the celebrated pedestrian of that name, ran eight miles in fifty-eight minutes, for a considerable wager. The ground was measured, on the banks of the canal, at Dublin, from Marun's factory to the Spa. The time allowed by the bet was an hour, and the Captain won without difficulty.

A SHORT time since, Mr. Wilson, a bookseller, from Newcastle, undertook to walk 96 miles, in 24 hours, for a considerable wager. He started from the bottom of Shooter's-hill at six o'clock, and completed his task within ten minutes of the time allowed.

HURLING MATCH.—Monday the 12th instant, a grand match of hurling was played on Kennington Common, between twenty-one Irishmen, and twenty-one (said to be) Russians. The Irish were distinguished by red caps ; the Russians by rough bear-skin caps. The hook was placed at each end of the common, and the ball weighed eighteen ounces.—The match, according to report, was made by the Irish nobility and several Russian officers of distinction.

tion. A vast number of spectators attended, and the play on the whole was remarkable for skill and activity. Hurling is a game little known in England, but of ancient origin. It was long in use among the Celtic nations. On this occasion the Russians, if they really were Russians, had the advantage, but we understand there is to be another trial to decide the contest.

Cutting an Animal's Throat to save its Life.—A valuable mare, the property of Mr. Oliver, master of the King's Arms Inn, in Dorchester, was on Saturday the 3d instant, seized with a violent inflammation in the throat, the virulence of which was such as to cause the apprehension of immediate suffocation; in this extremity Mr. Castly, veterinary surgeon in the 12th light dragoons, was called in, who, with much sang froid, made an incision through the windpipe, three inches long, about the midpart of the neck, which incision was kept open by the aid of strings, and through which the mare breathed; he then applied a poultice to the part affected, which produced the next day a copious discharge from the nostrils, and the orifice in the neck; the second day she breathed through one nostril, and the third day through both; the strings were then taken from the orifice, which is now closing very fast, and the mare, contrary to the expectation of all who saw it, is fast recovering.

MIRACULOUS ESCAPE.—Tuesday, the 6th instant, as Mr. Henry Smales, son of Francis Smales, Esq. of Durham, was riding at a pretty sharp pace, in company with another Gentleman, in the neighbourhood of Armathwaite, Cumberland, the mare of Mr. S. having, it is supposed, taken fright at something upon the road, suddenly sprung over the battlements of a bridge, 25 feet above the bed of the stream below. Mr. S. maintained his seat, and though he was so severely affected by the shock as to require being bled three times, he is almost perfectly recovered. The mare on which he rode was likewise bled, and appears in excellent condition and spirits.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.—On Wednesday evening, the 7th inst. a valuable brood mare, with a colt by her side, at grass, near Southampton, was maliciously stabbed with a reap-hook, which caused her immediate death. The mare was the property of Mr. Holderness, of Portsmouth, and had entered the field of the inhuman wretch who perpetrated the deed through a gap in the fence, from which he drove her into a lane adjoining, and killed her.

SOLOMON AND THE CAT.—The following curious circumstance may be relied on as a fact, which occurred during a late extensive fire at Bankside, Southwark:—In one of the houses that appeared as one sheet of fire, the firemen perceived a cat sitting on some bags which were in the midst of the flames; the cat cried, “mew! mew!” most bitterly, finding her escape impossible. One of the firemen who saw and heard her, cried out to Solomon, a Jew, who assisted them to work at the engine, “Solomon, you hear the cat calls out, Jew! Jew!” Solomon looked up and perceived the perilous situation of the unfortunate cat, who cried out again, N “mew!

"mew! mew!" Solomon most emphatically cried, "you shall not be disappointed in the Jew, if, at the risk of my life, I can save you." He threw up a rope, to which there was a hook attached, which fortunately stuck in the sack, and, with a quick jerk, he pulled the sack from the midst of the flames, and also the cat, whose hair was all singed from the fire. During an hour afterwards, whilst he worked at the engine, the cat never quitted him, but held fast on his shoulder, or sat near him, on the engine; and he afterwards brought the cat home to his own house, No. 5, Little Drury-lane.

August 31, died at Hythe, Kent, in consequence of a mortification proceeding from the dislocation of a finger, in stopping a cricket-ball, Captain James Bullen, of the Scots Greys.

ON Tuesday the 6th instant, as Sir Edward Hitchings, of Oxford, was fishing in a boat, on the lake at Blenheim, he perceived an enormous pike pursue and seize another of considerable size; the boatman drove the assailant away with his pole, but the smaller one was so much injured by the bite that he died.—Sir Edward took him from the water, and found the weight of him to be upwards of five pounds.

The larger one, from his appearance, must have weighed nearly thirty pounds.

A SEVERE combat took place on Monday the 12th inst. at Moulsey Hurst, betwixt Moss, the Shepperton sawyer, whose exhibitions have been before recorded, and a Baker from Kingston, also of pugilistic notoriety. Richmond and R. Wheeler seconded Moss, and Emmet and Monet the baker. After fighting one hour and a quarter, Moss was beat, but he rode off on horseback, and the Baker was the most punished.

ON Tuesday the 20th, a battle was fought at Highgate, betwixt J. Jay and —— Perrot, for 20gs. a side. The seconds were, Oliver and Palmer, for Jay, and Mendoza and Norton for Perrot. Betting 6 to 4 on the latter. During the first ten rounds, much obstinate fighting took place, with alternate advantage to both. The combatants stood to each other, and exchanged hits until one went down by a blow. Jay, after fighting eighteen minutes, succeeded in planting a blow on the side of Perrot, which doubled him up, and won the battle. The contest lasted 24 minutes. Jay, although the winner, was much disfigured.

THE HIGH COURT OF DIANA.

OCCASIONAL ADDRESS,

Written by S. J. ARNOLD, Esq. and spoken by Mrs. EDWIN, at the re-opening of Drury-lane Theatre, Sept. 20, 1814.

AT length, War's desolating banner furl'd,
Sweet Peace descends to bless the weary world!
Welcome, dear Stranger, from thy realms of bliss,
Too long a Stranger from all lands but this!
To all but BRITAIN, round whose chalky sides
Roll Ocean's subject, yet protecting tides!
To all—but this our highly favour'd Isle,
Where, midst surrounding War, thou still hast deign'd to smile!

Now parting tears are turn'd to joyous greetings,
" Now stern alarms chang'd to merry meetings ;"
Auspicious moment hail! when Peace restores Joy to our hearts, and plenty to our shores !

Farewell! a long farewell, to taxes—debts—
Farewell to glorious news!—farewell Gazettes!
Farewell the warrior's tale—tho' nobly sounded—
Farewell! thank Heav'n! to lists of kill'd and wounded.
Henceforth the Historic page alone shall tell
Who bravely conquer'd, or as bravely fell!
But still that page shall name with honest pride

Our cherish'd Heroes, who have fought and died!
Shall shew how well, on shore, or on the wave,
Our gallant Sailors, and our Soldiers brave,
Knew how Britannia's thunder should be hurl'd,
And Peace be gain'd by Vict'ry o'er the world!

England, be this thy just, thy noble boast!
The Exile still was welcome to thy coast!
Still 'mid the direst rage of War's alarms
The Wanderer found safe shelter in thine arms!

And, if permitted, on our British parts
To praise those deeds which honour British hearts,
Be this our proudest!—to have stretch'd the hand
By Freedom strengthen'd, over Afric's land!
Still to have urg'd our stedfast right, to be
The Foes of Slavery, who Ourselves are free!

Then hail, dear Peace! thou generous nurse of arts,
Friend of the Muses—welcome to our hearts!
What time so fit—as when thy cheering ray
Darts, like the glorious beam of new-born day
Thro' the long night of darkness and of storm,
To cheer and lighten every gloomy form—
What time so fit to dress each scenic muse
With brighter splendours, and with warmer hues!

To court the Arts to this their gay re-treat,
And deck, with richer tints, their favour'd seat.

For now, when Comic scenes possess the stage,
To mock its follies—if not mend the age—
No thought of distant friends who strive in war
Shall damp your mirth, and all our efforts mar;
Now, when those efforts would your cares beguile,
No smother'd sigh shall half repress the smile!
Nor, as the Tragic Muse shall here rehearse
Her well-wrought woe in mournful-measured verse,
When some lov'd Hero falls or Patriot dies,
No more shall kindred claims demand your sighs!
No more her sorrows to your hearts be known
To make, by sympathy, her pangs your own.

Here then, with Hope elate, once more we come
And bid you, like our warriors, welcome Home.
Long have we gladly labour'd in your cause—
Long may this Dome re-echo your applause,
For such reward, this brilliant temple grew;
Which now we dedicate to Peace and You.

THE CANADIAN HUNTER.

*Te, dulcis conjux, te solo in litore secum,
Te, veniente die, te decadente canebat.*

ONCE I had a Mohawk squaw,
Her name she said was Mary,
Who far excelled all the nymphs,
That range the forests airy.

I gave her ribbons for her hair,
That grac'd her head most finely;
A blanket green to wrap her round,
Which made her look divinely.

A matchicoat and leggins red,
With beads and ribbons showy;

And every thing to deck her out,
And many a shining toy.

But, ah! the nymph inconstant was,
Too fickle and too airy;
And I, alas! now weep alone,
Far from my bonny Mary.

O, were I but a savage man,
Besmeared with paint and greasy,
To follow Mary thro' the woods,
I then would be right easy.

With gun, and knife, and tomahawk,
I'd start each morning early,
To kill some dainties for the nymph,
Who charms my heart so rarely.

Each toil, each danger I would face,
No hardships could annoy,
For she at night would all repay,
And make me glow with joy.

Ye youthful swains, who know my flame,
O! if you see her wandering
Among the woods, or near the stream
So gently on meand'ring,
Conduct her kindly to the town
And do refrain from scorning,
Ye little know what pain I feel
When I awake each morning.

A SIMILE.

YOU say, Sir, once a Wit allow'd
A Lady to be like a cloud;
Then take a simile as soon
Between a Woman and the Moon;
For let mankind say what they will,
The sex are heav'nly bodies still.
Grant me (to mimic mortal life)
The Sun and Moon are man and wife;
Whate'er kind Sol affords to lend her,
Madam displays in midnight splendour;
For while to rest he lays him down,
She's up and star'd at through the town;
From him her beauties close confining,
And only in his absence shining;
Or else she looks like sullen tapers;
Or else is fairly in the vapours;
Or owns at once a wife's ambition,
And fully glares in opposition.
Say, is not this a modish pair,
Where each for other feels no care?
Whole days in separate coaches driving,
Whole nights to keep asunder striving;
Both in the dumps at gloomy weather,
And lying once a month together.
In one sole point unlike the case is,
